That warning aside we were anxious to fish. Those of us who needed a refresher course practiced our casting. The more experienced anglers tied on their flies and got to it. And it was only a few minutes before someone nabbed a couple-pound Dolly Varden (similar to an Arctic char). We were doing catch-and-release, as required by our one-day fishing licenses. Hours passed as we wandered upstream, carefully watching the incoming tide - I moved on whenever the cold water started to numb my thighs (the air temperature was warmer). I couldn't help keeping an eye on the nearby forest, just in case a bear should appear. None did. A lot of fish were caught but not by me. Still, I wouldn't have missed a minute of this day.

PHOTOS BY FRAN GOLDEN

Hubbard Glacier and the ice-filled Yakutat Bay were sights to behold. View is from Holland America's Oosterdam.

As I embraced the wild, my pal accompanying me on the cruise went off on another adventure shore excursion ($527 per person) that combined riding in a helicopter and landing on glaciers with a visit to a dogsled camp where teams of dogs led passengers and their guides on sled rides. He came back equally raving about his experience.

Alaska provides that kind of opportunity to try things you'd never do at home.

But even if you stay shipboard, you will quickly get the idea that this is one special place.

We spotted orca whales from our cabin balcony as soon as we hit the Inside Passage water, and later there were several sightings of whale spouts and dolphins.

With Alaska's glorious glaciers a big attraction, the Oosterdam spent a day cruising near Hubbard Glacier, where ice chunks, some the size of houses, floated in Yakutat Bay like so many ice cubes in an ice bowl, while the 76-mile tidewater glacier stretched before us in all its glory. It's a scene you will only find in Alaska.

Holland America operates eight ships in Alaska, May to September, on various itineraries. Cruises can be combined with land tours. One-week Alaska Explorer cruises are roundtrip from Seattle. Fares are from about $850. Some 250 shore excursions are available. For reservations, call your travel agent or visit www.hollandamerica.com.

Oosterdam Oasis

Of course, for some, a cruise is all about relaxing, and there are plenty of opportunities to do that on the Oosterdam. The ultimate spot is the Greenhouse Spa, where guests pay $40 a day ($150 for the week), to sooth in the jets of the large hydrotherapy pool and at the thermal suite with sauna, steam and heated, ocean-view mosaic beds (a great place to linger). Spa treatments are also available.

The ship's comfortable cabins provide a nice place to retreat as well - our deluxe cabin had a balcony and a bathtub, a cruise ship luxury. All the ship's cabins have niceties like chocolates on the pillow at night and fluffy bathrobes to keep you warm.

Those who want to get active shipboard can choose from such offerings as cooking demonstrations (free) and classes ($29) offered as part of Holland America's Culinary Arts Program in conjunction with Food & Wine magazine. There are also all the standard cruise ship activities - bingo, beauty seminars, wine tastings, contests and lessons in things like line dancing and towel folding. In the Oosterdam's casino you can learn to play Texas Hold 'Em, or pay $10 and work off calories in a Pilates class in the fitness center. Kids and teens are kept active in the Club HAL program - though this line gets mostly older adults, family reunions are popular.

At night, song-and-dance productions, performances by a magician and a comedian and a truly endearing show put on by the Indonesian crew members keep passengers well entertained.

There is, of course, a surplus of eating opportunities aboard the Oosterdam - including a midnight Chocolate Buffet one night. A culinary treat is the prime steak and seafood at The Pinnacle Grill ($20 for dinner, $10 for lunch).

The hydrotherapy pool at the Oosterdam's Greenhouse Spa was a nice place to unwind after a day of adventure.

Fly fishing at remote Chicken Creek.

SALOME'S STARS
FOR RELEASE WEEK OF
AUG. 4, 2008

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) A longtime situation starts to move into a new phase. The question for the uncertain Lamb right now is whether to move with it. Facts emerge by midmonth to help you decide.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) A talent for organizing your priorities allows the Divine Bovine to enjoy a busy social life and not miss a beat in meeting all workplace and/or family commitments.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) What began as a dubious undertaking has now become one of your favorite projects. Your enthusiasm for it rallies support from other doubters-turned-believers.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) Accept the help of friends to get you through an unexpectedly difficult situation. There'll be time enough later to investigate how all this could have happened so fast.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) Change is a major factor for the Big Cat through midmonth. Be prepared to deal with it on a number of levels, including travel plans and workplace situations.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) You might not like all the changes that have begun to take place around you. But try to find something positive in at least some of them that you can put to good use.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) A family member's unsettling experience could create more problems if it's not handled with care and love. And who's the best one to offer all that? You, of course.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) It might not be the right time for you to start a new venture. But it's a good time to start gathering facts and figures so you'll be set when the GO! sign lights up.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) The sagacious Sagittarius should have no trouble deciding between those who can and those who cannot be trusted to carry out a workplace commitment.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) Surprise, surprise. It looks as if that one person you once thought you could never hope to win over to your side just might suddenly choose to join you.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) You might have to set aside your pride for now and accept a change that isn't to your advantage. Cheer up. There'll be time later to turn this around in your favor.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) Your creative self emerges as dominant through midmonth. This should help you restart that writing or arts project you've left on the shelf for far too long.

Fun By The Numbers

Like puzzles? Then you'll love sudoku. This mind-bending puzzle will have you hooked from the moment you square off, so sharpen your pencil and put your sudoku savvy to the test!

Here's How It Works:

Sudoku puzzles are formatted as a 9x9 grid, broken down into nine 3x3 boxes. To solve a sudoku, the numbers 1 through 9 must fill each row, column and box. Each number can appear only once in each row, column and box. You can figure out the order in which the numbers will appear by using the numeric clues already provided in the boxes. The more numbers you name, the easier it gets to solve the puzzle!

From soap operas to Broadway

One-man show features many sides of Kevin Spirtas

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

Kevin Spirtas

Daytime television fans know actor Kevin Spirtas as the ambitious Dr. Craig Wesley on "Days of Our Lives" and, currently, as evil ambassador Jonas Chamberlain on "One Life to Live," but he's also an accomplished singer who has been seen on stage in "A Chorus Line" and "Hairspray" and backstage on Broadway where he was the standby for Hugh Jackman in "The Boy from Oz." It was those two sides of his career that inspired Spirtas to create "Night and Days," the nightclub act he will bring to Quincy's Inn at Bay Pointe on Wednesday, Aug. 13.

"This is a one-man show about my nights on Broadway and my days on 'Days of Our Lives,' and now 'One Life to Live'," explained Spirtas, 46, who earlier this year relocated to New York after being based in Los Angeles for many years. "I do some great standards and some wonderful Broadway music including songs from 'The Boy from Oz.'"

The Missouri-born Spirtas was a virtual newcomer to show business when he was cast in what was then Broadway's longest-running hit.

"I got a 'A Chorus Line' shortly after I first arrived in New York in the 1980s, but I didn't stay in New York too long that time around. There was such a hit to the theatrical community from AIDS and all the lives it claimed. Being in New York then, I always felt the ghosts of those losses to our community. New York just wasn't a comfortable place to be back then, so I moved to Los Angeles."

The move proved beneficial to Spirtas's burgeoning career. He was soon cast in a string of horror movies including "The Hills Have Eyes Part II" (1985), "Friday the 13th Part VII: The New Blood" (1988), "Bloodstone: Subspecies II" (1992), and "Bloodlust: Subspecies III."

"I have a joke in my act where I mention being the king of slasher film sequels, but there is some truth to it, too, which is fine by me. It doesn't bother me in the least when someone who remembers me from 'Friday the 13th Part VII' stops me on the street to talk about the movie. It's great to be recognized and it almost always feeds the other things I'm doing in my career."

Spirtas earned an additional, very loyal fan following on the long-running NBC-TV soap opera "Days of Our Lives," on which he played Dr. Craig Wesley from 1997 to 2003, with a brief return in 2005. It was during that visit to Salem, for the marriage of his character's daughter, that Spirtas introduced the song, "The Sweetest of Days and the Finest of Nights." A portion of the sales of each CD single on the song went directly to the American Red Cross for Hurricane Katrina victims.

Realizing his days on "Days" were numbered, Spirtas accepted an offer to return to Broadway as standby for Hugh Jackman in "The Boy from Oz," the musical based on the life of the late singer-songwriter Peter Allen that became the must-see show of the 2003-2004 season. Jackman proved to be very healthy, however, and Spirtas never actually went on in the role. Instead, he had time to ponder his next personal and professional moves.

"Los Angeles was a very good place for me. I called it home for 25 years, but there was something about my time in New York for 'The Boy from Oz' that made me think maybe it was time to return. Finally, I decided it was time to make peace with New York and I moved back on March 1st," says Spirtas. "About a week and a half later, I got the role on 'One Life to Live,' which was a very good sign, and there have been even more job offers since I returned. New York is different this time around, too. When I was here before, you didn't even dare to walk down 42nd Street or 8th Avenue. Now, those areas are clean and safe and the whole city is exploding with new cultural and artistic growth."

Spirtas is enjoying his role on the ABC-TV soap — which finds his character, "the rightful heir" to the throne of the fictional nation of Mendorra — coming between Antonio Vega (Kamar de los Reyes) and Talia Sahid (BethAnn Bonner), but he longs to spend more time on stage.

"I'm having a great time on 'One Life to Live,' where everything moves very quickly. A lot of true die-hard soap fans only know me as an actor and don't realize I sing, while some people who know me only from my Broadway and cabaret work don't realize I'm also a television and film actor. I would never sneeze at another daytime contract, if it were a great role, but the main purpose for me being in New York is to reconnect with Broadway and live performance," says Sprites, who played Corny Collins in the short-lived 2006 Las Vegas production of "Hairspray," in which original Broadway stars Harvey Fierstein and Dick Latessa reprised their Tony Award-winning roles. "Doing 'Hairspray' in Las Vegas was a great experience. I love the show and the Corny Collins character so I would definitely consider going into the Broadway company. I'm kind of like the new kid in town all over again, which is a lot of fun, and I'm looking at all kinds of possibilities."

J.M. Productions will present "Night and Days: An Evening with Kevin Spirtas" on Wednesday, Aug. 13 at the Inn at Bay Pointe, 64 Washington Court, Quincy. For tickets and more information, call 617-786-7469 or go online at jmproductionspresents.com

Soap opera knowledge put to the test

Daytime television fans planning to spend "An Evening with Kevin Spirtas" on Aug. 13, at Quincy's Inn at Bay Pointe, will also have a chance to test their soap opera knowledge in a pre-show trivia contest featuring Gerard J. Waggett, author of "The Ultimate Days of Our Lives Trivia Book" (Renaissance Books, 1999), the just-published "One Life to Live 40th Anniversary Trivia Book" (Hyperion) and nine other books on soap operas. A Dorchester native and adjunct English professor at Suffolk University, Waggett will be quizzing Spirtas' fans about their knowledge of the soaps on which the performer has appeared. Prizes will include autographed copies of Waggett's latest book.

"I'm looking forward to combining the trivia contest with Kevin's music because it captures the historical roots of what cabaret was. We think of cabaret now mainly as a musical concert, but it used to encompass other forms of entertainment as well," explained Waggett by telephone earlier this week of his role as Spirtas's opening act. "I can't sing, but I can ask questions."

He can answer them as well. In April 2003, Waggett competed on the classic television game show "Jeopardy!" He won two games and $46,900. Waggett credits his soap opera trivia books with helping him to be chosen to compete on the show.

Alex Trebek and Gerard J. Waggett in 2003 when Gerard competed on the classic television game show "Jeopardy!"

"Two of the contestant coordinators were huge 'All My Children' and 'The Young and the Restless' fans," he says. "One of them joked, 'He has an even sillier job than we do.'"

While on "Jeopardy!," Waggett actually answered a soap opera question on the top 10 single "Nadia's Theme," also the theme song to "The Young and the Restless." "I buzzed in and said, 'What is 'The Young and the Restless?" with more confidence than any other answer I gave."

A night of original Doo Wop

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

When Jon Bauman presents "Bowzer's Original Doo Wop Party" at the South Shore Music Circus on Friday, Aug. 15, the show's name will mean something, according to the former Sha Na Na singer.

"We have a great show planned for Cohasset. We're going to have Fred Paris and The Five Satins, known for their hits 'In the Still of the Night' and 'To the Aisle,' Jay Siegel and The Tokens whose top sellers include 'The Lion Sleeps Tonight' and 'Tonight I Fell in Love,' 'The Chiffons' who are famous for songs like 'One Fine Day,' and 'He's So Fine,' The G-Clefs who will be performing 'Ka-Ding Dong' and 'I Understand,' and Little Joe Cook, probably best known for 'Peanuts,' will be with us, too. Joe is 86 years old and he's just as great now as he has ever been," said Bauman by telephone from a Connecticut tour stop last week. "Every one of the groups in our show has at least one original member."

These days, when Bauman — who created the character of muscle shirt-wearing but muscle-less greaser "Bowzer" some 35 years ago when he replaced Alan Cooper as bass singer for Sha Na Na — isn't touring with "The Stingrays," he is traveling the country lobbying politicians on behalf of the "Truth in Music" committee he chairs in the Vocal Group Hall of Fame. With Bauman's leadership, "Truth in Music" bills — protecting artists from identity theft and consumers from deception and fraud - have been passed in 26 states including Massachusetts where the legislation was co-sponsored by Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth.

"Essentially, this legislation means that you have to have a recording member of the performing group or someone with federally registered rights to use the group's name," says the Juilliard-trained, Columbia University-educated Bauman, 60, who points out that the Platters, Drifters and

Jon Bauman as "Bowzer" from Sha Na Na

Coasters have been hit hardest by what he calls "counterfeit shows" by people pretending to be from the groups responsible for classic hits like "Smoke Gets in Your Eyes," "The Great Pretender," "Under the Boardwalk," "Charlie Brown" and "On Broadway."

"They are the three most valuable group names of the Doo Wop era," said Bauman. "It isn't an accident that these groups have been hit so hard by identity theft, because they have had so many hit records between them. A lot of what goes on has to do with the relative anonymity of people within the groups. The original records came out in the 1950s when record labels wouldn't even put photos of black groups on album covers. As a result, the public didn't always know what the artists looked like. What it really comes down to is a nasty, narrow consumer fraud issue. Phonies steal the work and the legacy of the original artists by deceiving the public."

The deception can sometimes be pretty clever, according to Bauman.

"Sometimes you see an older singer at one of these bogus shows. And then the audience thinks, 'That must be one of the original members,' but he's often a fake, too, just there to mislead the public."

The enduring fame and recognition that Sha Na Na earned with its self-titled, syndicated television variety series (1977-1982) has made things easier for the group's various past and present members still working today.

While Sha Na Na continues to tour – with original members Donny York on vocals and Jocko Marcellino on drums, as well as keyboard player Screamin' Scott Simon who replaced Joe Witkin in 1970 – Bauman left the group in 1983, not long after the television series went out of production. There will be a Sha Na Na reunion of sorts at the Music Circus next week, however, where Bauman will be joined by special guest Lennie Baker, a former Danny and the Juniors and Sha Na Na saxophonist. A Whitman native who now makes his home in Halifax, Baker retired from Sha Na Na in 2000, but like Bauman will forever be associated with the group that helped spark a 1950s nostalgia craze that continues to this day.

"Lennie Baker is one of my closest friends from 'Sha Na Na' and one of the funniest men alive. He is also godfather to my daughter, Nora. We'll sing 'Blue Moon' together and Lennie will also do 'Sixteen Candles.' The feeling is just amazing when Lennie and I work together. We have always gotten along very well and so everything floods back instantly when we reunite and it is almost like we never stopped working together."

("Bowzer's Original Doo Wop Party" will be at the South Shore Music Circus, 130 Sohier St., Cohasset, on Friday, Aug. 15. For tickets and information, visit the box office, call 617-931-2787 or go online at themusiccircus.org.).

Hootie & the Blowfish

Concert fans encouraged to bring school supplies for Cohasset Public Schools and libraries

Two-time Grammy award winning Hootie & the Blowfish will gear up and hit the road again this summer, returning to the South Shore Music Circus, Cohasset, and it's not all about music. In conjunction with the Hootie & the Blowfish Foundation, the band's nationwide Homegrown Concert Series is spearheading an effort to collect school supplies for economically challenged schools in each community it visits. The 25-City Homegrown tour, stopping at South Shore Music Circus on Aug. 10, asks all ticket holders to bring any school supply item to the concert, as a donation, and following the concert, the supplies will be dispersed, as a community-wide service project, to the Cohasset Public Schools and libraries, for distribution throughout the school and library systems, including schools, preschools, and other Cohasset organizations in need. To date, the band and its loyal fans have helped fill more than 30 busloads, totaling around $150,000 worth of much needed school supplies for children. Tickets are on sale now and are available at the Music Circus box office, open daily from noon till 6 p.m. for in-person sales; online atthemusiccircus.org or by phone through Ticketmaster at 617-931-2787.

Hootie & the Blowfish — made up of Mark Bryan, Dean Felber, Darius Rucker, and Jim "Soni" Sonefeld — is one of the most successful music groups of all time, and since their first album debuted in 1994, the band has played to millions of fans and sold more than 25 million albums worldwide. Because of this entitlement, Hootie & the Blowfish believe they have a responsibility to use their celebrity status to help improve the lives of those in need, especially children. They often take the lead in creating projects where they can join forces with other organizations to help make a positive difference in lives of today's youth. The Hootie & the Blowfish Foundation was established just for that purpose. As a private non-profit organization, The Foundation was originally created in 2000 to benefit children of South Carolina through education and supporting school music programs—since then, it has spread to a nationwide campaign.

"Our children are our best resource and our most hopeful investment. With proper tools, our children can receive a well-rounded and meaningful education," says lead singer, Darius Rucker.

In 2003 the band members established an annual concert in their hometown, Charleston, S.C., as a way to help raise awareness of the needs of local school children in the community. Every year, many schools are forced to receive budget cuts that ultimately, in one way or another, affects the quality of education each child receives. The night of the concert, ticket holders were asked to bring school supplies of any kind to the concert held at Family Circle Magazine Stadium. The response was overwhelming, and the Charleston County School District children were the beneficiaries of a generous community effort. A 55-seat school bus was filled from top to bottom with school supplies and following the concert those supplies were distributed to the schools and teachers who were in most need.

Knowing the positive effect this project had on the kids and the community, the band wanted to expand the concert into other markets. In 2006, the band took the Homegrown Tour to a national level, expanding the tour to 12 dates, and on to13 more in 2007. To date, the band and their loyal fans have helped fill over 30 busloads, totally around $150,000 worth of much needed school supplies for children.

This year Hootie & the Blowfish, will continue the concert series once more, picking up a total of 25 stops, including Cohasset, on Aug. 10.

Tickets are on sale now and are available in person at the Music Circus box office, open daily from noon till 6 p.m.; online at themusiccircus.org or by phone through Ticketmaster at 617-931-2787.

Parking headaches for shoppers, merchants

Signs send conflicting messages

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

It is no secret to the residents of Cohasset that the Village has its quirks. Among those quirks are the parking regulations and signage that are anything but consistent.

A look around the parking signage in the village yields an eclectic mix of regulations that seem to change on every street, and sometimes on the same street.

Parking in the town center, from the street parking on Main Street to the Common, has been a hot topic this summer. In May, the Selectmen created two 15-minute parking spaces from 6 to 9p.m. in front of the Village Liquor Store. In June, the Selectmen grappled with the possibility of changes being made in the way Cohasseters have parked around the Town Common for years. In July, the Selectmen made changes to the parking rules on Elm Street.

While not unusual to have multiple parking regulations in a given area, some signage in the village is confusing and, in some areas, conflicting.

"We understand that some of the signage in the village appears to be confusing," said Police Chief James Hussey in a phone interview.

Brook Street has signage indicating there is one-hour parking but there are no street lines delineating spaces and the road is just wide enough to allow two-way traffic.

In front of Tedeschi's there are two signs a telephone pole apart, one indicating there is 15-minute parking with an arrow pointing left, the other indicating 30-minute parking pointing to the right.

In front of Tedeschi's there are two signs a telephone pole apart, one indicating there is 15-minute parking with an arrow pointing left, the other indicating 30-minute parking pointing to the right. The signs reference the same spaces.

On Elm Street there is a "no parking" sign near the pedestrian crosswalk, yet 10-feet closer to the intersection with S. Main is a sign indicating one-hour parking during the daytime.

While the one-hour daytime parking restriction is the most pervasive regulation, there are spots where that's not the case. Most of the deviations from the one-hour parking rule are due to their proximity to a specific business where

Breaking down the language barrier

Su Escuela immerses students in another language

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Before your child is even fully potty trained, he or she could be learning a second language.

That's the central idea behind Su Escuela, the Spanish language immersion center in Cohasset, where children as young as two years old can begin to absorb and learn another language.

Sandra Baldeón, founder and director of Su Escuela, speaks passionately about the importance of being bilingual—or even multi-lingual—in today's increasingly global society. While many countries in Europe and elsewhere require students to learn multiple languages, the US is lagging.

"We're closing ourselves in," said Baldeón, a native of Chile. "Learning another language in this society is no longer a luxury anymore, now it is just a need. Both inside and outside the country there is a need to know at least two languages."

The ongoing Olympics are the ideal example of a global event where multiple languages and people converge. But, in everyday business and travel, Baldeón said it is more important than ever to be able to communicate in multiple languages and across borders.

"(At Su Escuela) they start at two years old and by four years old they

Regulating stormwater

Con Comm approves regulations for bylaw

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

If you're thinking about adding an addition to your home or paving your gravel driveway, a stop into the Conservation Commission office might be an order. The new stormwater management bylaw, passed at the spring Annual Town Meeting, now has an accompanying set of rules and regulations to govern the process.

On Wednesday night, the Conservation Commission approved the stormwater rules 20-page regulations, 20-page appendix and application.

The regulations establish minimum requirements and procedures to control the adverse effects of increased stormwater runoff, decreased groundwater recharge, and non-point source pollution associated with new development and redevelopment. While the bylaw and regulations can't do anything about existing stormwater problems, the aim is to prevent further exacerbation of the issue.

Calling the bylaw and its accompanying rules and regulations "cutting edge," Conservation Commission member Sarah Charron thanked the town's consulting stormwater engineers and now stormwater agent, Norfolk Ram Group, for their work on both the regulations and the bylaw.

"We're lucky to be in a community

This week, the Mariner caught up with Luke Ryan, Claire McCarthy and Mamme Daley — three lifeguards and swim instructors at the Cohasset Swim Center.

Name: Luke Ryan, Claire McCarthy and Mamme Daley.

Occupation: Student, Lifeguard and Swim Teacher (Luke). Lifeguard/WSI at CSC (Claire). Lifeguard and swim instructor (Mamme).

Best day of your life: When swim students and parents bring the lifeguards any kind of goodies, it makes the day! (Luke). The best is yet to come (I'm so corny) (Claire). Any day CSC patrons bring baked goods for the lifeguards (Mamme).

Best (or worst) vacation: Traveling to Costa Rica in 2007 with my school, or any surfing family vacation! (Luke). My family went to a farm in New Hampshire for Easter when I was 9...collecting real eggs from chickens on Easter morning at 4 a.m. was not as fun as I had imagined (Claire). Weekends away with friends I don't see often (Mamme).

Favorite season: Spring (Luke). Fall (Claire). Spring (Mamme).

Favorite holiday: My Birthday (Luke). 'tis September 19th, International Talk-Like-A-Pirate Day (Claire). My Birthday (Mamme).

Favorite junk food or meal: Freeze pops (Luke). Tortilla soup with sour cream and tortilla chips accompanied by a Diet Coke with lime (Claire). Any type of sandwich (Mamme).

Best book: "The Kite Runner" (Luke). "The Catcher in the Rye" (Claire). "The Alchemist" by Paulo Coelo and "The Pact" by Jodi Picoult (Mamme).

Best movie: "Ocean's 11" (Luke). "Dead Poets Society" (Claire). "The Big Green" and "Miracle" (Mamme).

Best TV show: "The Office" (Luke). "30 Rock" (Claire). "NCIS" (Mamme).

Favorite music, song, group or artist: John Mayer (Luke). Song- "Teenage Kicks" by the Undertones (Claire). "Swallowed in the Sea" by Coldplay (Mamme).

Fun fact about yourself: My real name is actually Michael and Luke is my middle name! (Luke). Most people have no idea that I play the cello (Mamme).

Most embarrassing moment: I couldn't actually spell my first name (Michael) until the 5th grade when I was forced to learn because I had to write my full name on standardized testing (Luke). I was in a movie theater and a little kid ran past me down the aisle and in true CSC lifeguard fashion I instinctually yelled, "WALK, PLEASE!" (Claire).

Pet peeve: Swim lessons when it's cold, rainy, and supposed to thunder but doesn't, and trouble-makers at the pool (Luke). Adults that come up to lifeguards at the pool and demand a refund for the vending machines; we have nothing to do with them! (Claire). When the weather report says it is going to thunder and then it never does and rain during swim lessons without any thunder (Mamme).

Goal: Graduate high school strong and move on to college (Luke). To start a conspiracy theory that millions of people believe (Claire). Help others as much as possible (Mamme).

Person you'd most like to meet: John Mayer (Luke). Shane MacGowan from the band The Pogues (Claire). There is no one left to meet after working at CSC (Mamme).

Biggest worry: Senior Year and college applications! (Luke). Politics these days (Claire). To not become too stressed (Mamme).

Best part of Cohasset: Without a doubt, CSC (Luke). Without a doubt, CSC (Claire). Taking naps on the beach (Mamme).

POLICE BEAT

Scituate man being summonsed following accident

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Witnesses reported seeing a car in the woods off South Main Street near Summer Street. Police and fire responded, found the locked car, but not the driver.

A 36-year-old Scituate man is being summonsed to court after leaving the scene of an accident that occurred about 1 a.m. on Sunday (Aug. 10). Witnesses reported seeing a car in the woods off South Main Street near Summer Street. Police and fire responded, found the locked car, but not the driver. The black Toyota was towed and police searched the area but could not locate anyone. Police ran the plate and determined the car's registered owner lived in Scituate. Scituate police went to the house but no one was home, Chief James Hussey said.

About 50 minutes later, an officer saw a man staggering along South Main Street by Beechwood Street. He spoke to the man and determined he was very intoxicated. The man was taken into protective custody.

"This gentleman turned out to be the registered owner of the Toyota," Hussey said. He explained that police are seeking charges of leaving the scene after causing property damage and marked lanes violation. The incident is under investigation and further charges are possible, he said.

Skiff let loose

A walk-in to the police station last week reported that someone had cut the lock off her skiff near the Olde Salt House and let it float away sometime on Saturday (Aug. 2). She had left her skiff the night before and when she returned to the harbor the following morning she found her boat tied up at a different location. She explained a lobsterman had told her he had seen the skiff tied up at 10 a.m. and about 90 minutes later, saw it floating loose. He tied it up at the new location, police said.

"It appears that someone may have been angry about where the boat was tied up although she had permission from the harbormaster to do so and cut it loose," Chief Hussey said. An oar was also snapped in half, police said.

Police and the harbormaster are investigating to see if anyone saw anything, Hussey said.

Intoxicated

Police said a teen who was sleeping on the deck of a home on Border Street was under the influence of alcohol. The caller reported a man was sleeping on her deck at 5:13 a.m. on Tuesday (Aug. 5). Police responded, contacted the teen's family and took him to his home on Reservoir Road.

Phone bill

At about 8:50 a.m. on Tuesday (Aug. 5), a Pleasant Street resident reported that he had received a telephone bill for more than $900 for a telephone line that he did not have.

Apparently an account was established in his name without his knowledge. Detectives are investigating and had the resident fill out an identity theft packet.

Check larceny

On Tuesday (Aug. 5), a walk-in came to the station to speak to detectives about larceny from a checking account of about $14,000. The victim believes the counterfeit check was created using her business's account information. The check was cashed outside the country and the victim discovered it when she was reviewing her monthly statement. She provided a copy of the check and police are working with the bank's fraud department in the investigation.

Withdrawal

Police are working with the callers and their mortgage company to determine if the mortgage company was authorized to take money due electronically out of their account. The caller reported discovering $7,000 had been taken out of her account and that someone had tried to take out another $4,000 the next day. There was an outstanding balance and investigators are trying to determine if the caller, who was in arrears, had ever given permission for money to be paid electronically to the mortgage company. "At this point, we do not know if a crime has been committed or not," Chief Hussey said.

Solicitors

Door-to-door solicitors for Horizon Foods decided not to register after the town bylaw was explained to them and they left town, police said. A Jerusalem Road caller complained at 2:24 p.m. on Tuesday (Aug. 5) there were solicitors knocking on her door that did not have permits. The next day a caller reported a man and woman were at her door asking for money and telling her they were concerned about the world. Because the couple are Jehovah's Witnesses, they are allowed to go door-to-door, because they are part of a charitable organization.

Under the bylaw, solicitors are required to register with the police where they can apply for a $25 license. They are required to wear a badge issued by the police that includes their name and photograph. In addition solicitors have to provide police with their name, address, date of birth and height, weight and eye color, Social Security number; dates and times of canvassing activities; name and address of employer; and a brief description of the purposes of the solicitation.

Exceptions to the bylaw are town, state or federal officers or employees on official business; minors under 18 unless in connection with a commercial activity; candidates for public office or campaign workers; those promoting political causes and those soliciting for charitable organizations unless those solicitors are paid.

Buying for kids

Chief Hussey said establishments in town that sell alcohol do a good job of ensuring that no one underage buys or is served.

Last week, a caller witnessed a woman buying beer for minors at a package store. The car the woman was driving took off toward Scituate and Scituate police were advised. However, there was not enough information about the car for police to locate it.

Hussey said however, if anyone sees someone buying alcohol for minors, police want to know about it.

Wallets

A walk-in reported to police last week that the last time she remembered having her wallet was in the checkout line at Shaw's. She had taken it out of her handbag. After paying, she realized she no longer had her wallet that contained her driver's license, credit cards, gift cards and some cash.

She checked her house, car, and retraced her steps and could not locate it. She cancelled her credit cards as a precaution.

Police gave her an identity theft packet to fill out.

In an unrelated incident, a Good Samaritan found a wallet on Government Island and brought it to the station. Police called the owner of the wallet who picked it up, nothing was missing, police said.

Found bike

A contractor working on Beach Street found a 26-inch, red and black Peugeot men's bicycle in the woods and brought it to the station last Friday. If the owner wants to claim the bike, he or she should come to the station, Hussey said.

MV crash

At 2:20 p.m. on Saturday (Aug. 9), a 2004 Dodge, operated by a Scituate resident, was heading south on Route 3A near Beechwood Street, when the driver stopped to allow an ambulance to pass through the intersection. The ambulance was traveling west on Beechwood.

The car behind the Dodge, a 2005 Jeep, operated by a Marshfield woman, could not stop and struck the rear of the Dodge. The Marshfield woman was cited for failure to stop safely. There were no apparent injuries and neither car had to be towed, police said.

Vandalism

Vandals tipped over one of the lifeguard stands at Sandy Beach last week. There was no damage but the vandals dug out the legs and tipped the structure over. The incident was reported at 9:19 a.m. on Sunday (Aug. 10).

Night crew

The manager of the night crew at Stop & Shop called police last week after he heard yelling in the parking lot and saw a red pickup truck with teens "horsing around," police said. In an unrelated matter, the night manager also asked police to check the welfare of an employee who rides his bike to work and was a little late. The employee arrived safely and the red truck was gone when police arrived. The calls came in at about 12:30 a.m. on Thursday (Aug. 7).

Car damaged

A 2000 Volvo driven by a 60-year-old Cohasset woman had to be towed after it scraped several cement posts on North Main Street near Cedar Street at about 1:27 p.m. on Thursday (Aug. 7).

The woman, who was traveling south (toward the village), had pulled over to allow at black SUV that had been tailgating her to pass. When she pulled over, she hit the posts and the damage affected the tires of the Volvo, police said. The SUV did not stop and the woman in the Volvo could not provide the plate number.

BRIEFLY

Building gets OK behind Good Sport

The Planning Board approved a new building located behind the small strip mall on King Street (Route 3A) where Good Sport is located. The approved project calls for a one-story 1040-square foot building on a concrete slab to be used for indoor boat repair/winter storage. The new building will replace an existing 18-by-45 foot canvas on metal frame structure at the rear of the existing commercial building.

All projects over 200-square feet in a commercial district must go before the Planning Board for a site plan review.

In the site plan review, the Planning Board found the proposed construction was harmonious with existing neighborhood used and potential future uses, given the similar commercial used that predominate the immediate area. The property is located in the highway business zoning district.

The building will have asphalt roofing shingles and cedar siding. Because of the building adjacency to a residential district (Fair Oaks Lane), there will no windows on the side of the building facing the residential property in order to mitigate noise. The owner of the property is Roger Hill of 19A Highland Ave.

All projects over 200-square feet in a commercial district must go before the Planning Board for a site plan review.

Construction on the building will begin shortly.

"I was waiting for all the ducks to be in a row, and now they are in a row," said Hill after the Planning Board gave their approval in a vote of 4-0 (member Charles Samuelson was not present).

that values its water resources and is at the forefront of stormwater management," said Charron.

The Commission has been discussing the regulations draft for several meetings leading up to the public hearing Wednesday night, so the majority of the discussion centered on minor changes to the text. With the exception of the Mariner and Selectman Karen Quigley, no members of the public attended the public hearing to offer comment.

Smaller projects, such as sheds, will not be affected by the stormwater bylaw. Once projects increase the impervious surface of a property by 500 square feet or more, consideration for stormwater runoff must be taken. When projects alter more than 5,000 square feet, a resident or developer needs to obtain a stormwater permit, which is a public hearing process.

It is the hope of the Conservation Commission that projects will seek the commission and stormwater agent's advice early in the planning stages so they can encourage the use of low impact development techniques. Low-impact development techniques include raingardens, minimizing impervious surfaces, treating stormwater in numerous small, decentralized structures and utilizing natural topography for drainage ways and storage areas.

The regulations state "a pre-application meeting may be helpful to avoid unnecessary stormwater management activity and may possibly help to eliminate the need for filing an application altogether." A preliminary discussion could especially help with the smaller, borderline projects.

"We want people to think about stormwater early on in the development process," said Mark Bartlett of Norfolk Ram Group.

"People need to realize this is part of doing business in Cohasset now," said Charron.

Because the bylaw is new to everyone in town, it is expected there will be a learning curve for all involved in the process from the applicants to the Conservation Commission.

The Conservation Commission, after about an hour of discussion, approved the rules and regulations, appendix and application.

After approving the rules and regulations, the Commission briefly discussed how to best educate both the residents and the town employees who will have to answer their questions.

Stormwater Management in brief

• Stormwater negatively impacts the health of Cohasset's water bodies. Stormwater is rainwater and snowmelt that runs off lawns and streets and picks up bacteria, fertilizers, pesticides, oil and grease and other pollutants on the way to our brooks, rivers ponds, meadows, harbors and beaches. In Cohasset Cove and harbor there is bacteria, nutrients and other contaminants. After a one-inch rainfall, the harbor is automatically closed for swimming. In James Brook there are nutrients, bacteria, total suspended solids and low dissolved oxygen.

• The bylaw ensures future development incorporates stormwater controls. The bylaw does not prevent future development, but rather ensures stormwater controls are designed for each project to prevent additional stormwater flooding and pollution leaving each site.

• There is a two-tiered approval process managed by the Conservation Commission and the town's stormwater agent (Norfolk Ram Group). Projects increasing net impervious area by 500 square feet will require an "administrative approval" by the stormwater agent. Projects altering more than 5,000 square feet will require a more extensive "stormwater permit" from the Conservation Commission. Application and review fees will cover the cost of the stormwater agent.

• Permitting thresholds were developed scientifically. The size of projects proposed to trigger review under the bylaw was developed based on hydrologic calculations evaluating changes in volume and peak flow of stormwater runoff. This evaluation was conducted by the Stormwater Management Committee consulting engineer, Norfolk Ram Group, hired by Cohasset to assist in the development of the stormwater management bylaw. The engineering consultant evaluated the impact of increasing the impervious surface area for typical lot sizes, building footprints and driveway footprints using typical Cohasset soil conditions.

Information compiled by the Conservation Commission.

Planning Board reviews village design guidelines

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

It's still a work in progress, but the Planning Board is inching further to approving a set of design guidelines to steer new development and re-development in the Village Business District. On Monday night, they held a public hearing on the design guidelines, which will complement the village zoning bylaws already in the books.

Devoting about an hour to discussion among the board as well as accepting comments from the public, the Planning Board continued its efforts to keep the public involved with nearly everything to do with the village.

The design guidelines, simply stated, is a set of regulations to go with the village zoning bylaws to aid both the Planning Board and the applicants during the permitting process. It includes a set of guiding principles as well as specific areas for application assessments — everything from rooflines to materials to signage to landscaping.

"Our end goal is to make the village as viable economically as possible by encouraging the right kind of development…all with the object of maintaining the village's somewhat eclectic character. Our hope is to encourage similar development to what's there while enabling some flexibility and diversity," said Planning Board member Mike Westcott, who has been the lead on this project. With the professional consulting help from Angus Jennings of Concord Square Planning and Development, the Planning Board has a 21-page draft of the guidelines, which include text and graphic components.

"We need to find the balance of effectively setting out the vision for the village, but not putting designers in a straightjacket," said Jennings.

Defining what gives the village its character — and therefore what the Planning Board would like to ensure carried over to new or renovated development—is not an easy task.

"Part of what makes (the village) is everything isn't in lockstep. It is as if someone had too much to drink one night and laid it out wrong," said Planning Board chairman Al Moore. Yet, it seemed clear a modern all glass building would not be appropriate for the New England village. Planning Board member Clark Brewer suggested a building with modern lines with clapboard or other traditional influences could work.

Planning Board vice chairman Stuart Ivimey was against flat roofs of any kind in the village, but other members believed a flat roof could work if the design was good.

"There is a need for flat roofs in some circumstances," said Planning Board member Clark Brewer. A flat roof can house air conditioning units and other equipment that may otherwise be conspicuous. Currently, the design guidelines stipulate flat roofs are allowed, but only when they are "occupiable" and accessible from an interior room and must be edged by a railing or parapet. A roof deck or widow's walk would be permissible, as would a flat roof built to accommodate solar panels.

Much of the discussion focused on smaller, specific issues in the draft design guidelines, but Moore was concerned at what point the design guidelines would come into play. Obviously, with large projects or entirely new buildings, an extensive site plan review would need to be done, yet smaller exterior changes might not need such thorough review, and/or require any at all.

"We're not going to be overwhelmed with complete rebuilds, most of the changes will come from existing buildings with some modifications…at what point do the guidelines come into play?" said Moore. Although a zoning bylaw exists for all commercial business districts (including the village) requiring any reconstruction or addition of 200 square feet or more triggers to come before the Planning Board for a site plan, exterior changes like re-shingling or new windows might not have to come before the board for approval.

No clear answer was forthcoming among the board and the issue will be discussed at a later date.

Following approval of the design guidelines, an application form (essentially a checklist) will be created to correspond exactly with the specific requirements of the design guidelines. If part of the project will not or cannot conform to a design guideline, the applicant needs a waiver from the Planning Board (not a variance).

"The regulations do set a high standard, but in the end it will streamline the process," said Jennings by giving applicants clear guidance on what the town and the Planning Board is looking for in a project.

Some developers, particularly those whose properties border on the parking way, reiterated the importance of a town plan for a sidewalk and other pedestrian amenities to enable the "second main street façade" talked about for the town parking lot. The property owners brought up the issue at the last meeting at the informal design guidelines meeting held in late June.

"It's time for the town and the Planning Board to come up with a plan — straighten out the property lines to build a sidewalk. The opportunity is now," said Wayne Sawchuk, owner of 35-39 South Main St., which borders on the town parking lot.

Jagged property lines currently prevent a continuous sidewalk from being built bordering the parking lot. However, Sawchuk said if the town stepped forward and presented a plan, the developers would likely be willing to comply because a pedestrian way would be to their benefit.

"The key thing is to have the village connected in the back," said Sawchuk.

Chris Ford, owner of the Village Wine and Spirits building, said the opportunity for significant change in the village isn't going to come on Main Street: "The opportunity for change is in the rear, but there isn't much focus on that."

Westcott suggested the Planning Board set aside time to discuss that particular area at a future meeting. A two-hour block for village design guideline discussion has been planned for Monday, September 22.

Design Review Board not yet populated

At last fall's Special Town Meeting, voters overwhelmingly supported the revival of the Design Review Board, which was set for the chopping block. Yet, nearly nine months later the Design Review Board has not been populated by town. A Troika appointed board, the Design Review Board works cooperatively with the Planning Board to put forth a desirable project for the town. The Troika is made up of the chairman of the Board of Selectmen, the Chairman of the Advisory Committee and the Town Moderator.

Town Manager Bill Griffin said he was waiting for the Troika to meet and interview the candidates for the Design Review Board. Five interested citizens came forward willing to do the job in the late spring.

The Planning Board said Monday night they would like to get the Design Review Board's input on the village design guidelines before they are approved.

"There is a sense of urgency, we'd like to hear their response to this document," said Planning Board Mike Westcott. With several projects possibly coming down the pipeline for the village, the Planning Board would like to have them on board to review those first village projects under the new bylaw as well.

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

SUMMER'S BACK

Hi Cohasset. Summer is back thank goodness. I am so tired of being cold. Now lets see if we get a great September weather-wise. I know the kids are so happy to enjoy the rest of this month with fun in the sun at the beach, pools and camps all around. Cohasset native Lt. Allison Berg is an Officer of the Deck

By LTJG Todd Stover
USS MOMSEN

Editor's Note: Cohasset native Lieutenant Allison Berg has been serving in the US Navy aboard the USS Momsen. She is the daughter of Miki and Peter Berg, of 9 Ledgewood Dr., Cohasset. She is a 2004 graduate of the U.S. Naval Academy with a Bachelor of Science degree in Oceanography. She received her Master of Science degree in Ocean Engineering from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology of Woods Hole Oceanographic Institute in 2006. As of May 23, 2008, Allison is now a full lieutenant. Below is a copy of an article featured on the USS Momsen's family website written by LTjg Todd Stover of the USS Momsen.

LTjg Allison Berg, LTjg Courtney Thraen, and ENS Allison Cady on the USS Momsen earlier last spring. On May 23, Berg was promoted to lieutenant.

USS Momsen (DDG 92) has enjoyed four months of its fifth fleet deployment, sailing West through the Pacific and Indian Oceans. Along the way, Momsen visited Palau, Brunei and recently Mombasa, Kenya. Although this is Momsen's second deployment, this is its first deployment operating with the Abraham Lincoln Strike Group. Momsen, an Aegis guided-missile destroyer home ported in Everett, Washington, conducted extensive unit and joint level training for more than a year to reach this stage of deployment, exercising superb proficiency in air, surface and subsurface warfare.

While underway, the premier controlling watch stander is the Officer of the Deck, serving as the Commanding Officer's representative on the bridge. Officers of the Deck are not only responsible for safe navigation, but also tactical maneuvering to support an array of ongoing missions in the Global War on Terror. However, all of Momsen's Officers of the Deck share one similar trait – they are all female Surface Warfare Officers.

LTjg Allison Berg, LTjg Courtney Thraen and ENS Allison Cady stand Officer of the Deck Underway, leading and training teams of three additional junior officers, along with Boatswain Mates and Quartermasters. As Officers of the Deck, all three female officers are charged to execute Momsen's dynamic schedule, working tirelessly to coordinate Engineering evolutions, Combat exercises and ship-wide events.

"I worked really hard to get Officer of the Deck qualified, and the effort was definitely worth it. I really enjoy watching less experienced junior officers in my watch team become proactive and take charge, especially when expertly, but rapidly, demonstrating pre-planned responses for everything from a small boat attack to a man overboard. I know Momsen will be in good hands for a long time," LTjg Allison Berg said.

Momsen's Officers of the Deck also oversee high-risk evolutions, including launching and recovering Rigid Hull Inflatable Boats and Helicopters. Other high-risk evolutions include weekly underway replenishments and weapons firing exercises. The Commanding Officer, CDR Michael C. Sparks, chose three Officers to effectively drive the ship's schedule, expertly maneuver during tactical warfare, and most importantly, maintain safe navigation when encountering vessels at sea or transiting through restricted waters.

"Hands down, the best aspect of standing Officer of Deck Underway is developing a cohesive team that can effectively and rapidly work together to accomplish several objects simultaneously to successfully execute the assigned mission," said ENS Allison Cady.

"It's amazing to watch everyone work smoothly together, most notably with aggressive contact management while simultaneously executing internal and external communications. The entire ship works as a team to accomplish its mission, and the focal point of the efforts is most apparent on the bridge. Additionally, everyone from the most junior Deck Seaman to the most senior officer is an expert at emergency management. Officers of the Deck continuously train to crisis management, and the results produce quick resolutions for issues such as equipment malfunction or tactical miscommunication," LTjg Courtney Thraen said.

As Momsen's junior officers become more proficient and earn advanced qualifications, the current Officer of the Deck watch standers will inevitably change, but the aggressive training conducted by the rotation of three female Officers of the Deck has kept Momsen on an even keel, ready for any tasking or unforeseen challenge.

at understanding the language and speaking in sentences," says Baldeón. During the course of typical pre-school activities like arts and crafts, math, reading and games, the teachers (who are all native Spanish speakers) talk only in Spanish. Baldeón is a firm advocate for starting language studies early on in life when kids aren't as self-conscious or fearful of new things.

"At age two or three, they don't question it. They just follow and do it. As an adult or an older child we have to figure out why," says Baldeón. Su Escuela is located at 760 Chief Justice Cushing Highway (Route 3A), across from the Shaw's Plaza.

The Cohasset Public Schools and other area schools have recognized the importance of foreign language to a complete education for the child. This year in Cohasset, classroom foreign language studies begin in the sixth grade and more language credits will be required upon graduation. Su Escuela, which means "Our School" in Spanish, will be running after-school language programs at both Osgood and Deer Hill. A French immersion class, taught by a Parisian, will be offered at Deer Hill as well.

"If you can communicate you can make contact with other cultures and gain a better understanding."
— Sandra Baldeón, Su Escuela

The after-school classes will be a little bigger than the ones at Su Escuela — 12 students, instead of seven — but will teach the same way: by immersing kids in the language. After-school classes are also offered at Derby Academy, Old Colony Montessori School, both in Hingham.

Baldeón says in the 24-week program the kids can learn an astonishing amount. Beyond just memorization of numbers, colors or animals, the Su Escuela teachers make connections between the words so the kids retain the information better.

"As soon as the kids come through the door, they don't hear a word in English…it is like coming to another country for an hour," says Baldeón. All of the signs, books, materials are in Spanish, so for the hour or two the child is at Su Escuela they are immersed in another language.

"The goal of this is fluency," said Baldeón. Essentially, to be able to communicate in another language, not necessarily with all the correct grammar or syntax, which comes in time.

Opening in 2004, Su Escuela has taught hundreds of kids the Spanish language. Each year they teach as many as 250 students from age two to adults. Both Spanish and French classes are available.

"Language makes us more human by allowing different cultures to communicate with each other," says Baldeón. Language can be the one barrier that prevents two people from effectively communicating, which can lead to fear and discrimination. "If you can communicate you can make contact with other cultures and gain a better understanding."

Having the skill of another language can give kids the confidence to travel and to learn, "they don't have to be afraid of anything." She describes the kids who come to Su Escuela have the opportunity to become "superkids" with the skills, knowledge and confidence to go on and become leaders.

"It's a win-win here, nobody loses," says Baldeón. While some kids may decide not continue at Su Escuela after a certain age, she says the basics of the language will always remain.

"Just like riding a bike, it will come back to them when they are required to take language in school…Language is a tool you can give to your child."

For more information on Su Escuela, please visit their web site at www. suescuela.com or contact Director Sandra Baldeón at 781-383-2585 or via e-mail at info@suescuela.us.

HEALTH UPDATE

Time to commit mosquito murder

Pesky insects can cause health problems

According to Health Inspector Tara Tradd, there have been no positive mosquito pools for West Nile Virus or eastern equine encephalitis (EEE) virus found in Cohasset or any of its bordering towns (Hingham, Hull and Scituate). A mosquito pool positive for the West Nile Virus was found in Weymouth earlier this week.

West Nile Virus

What is it: West Nile Virus (WNV) is carried by mosquitoes. Mosquitoes become infected from feeding on infected birds. West Nile Virus can cause mile to serious illness in humans. It is usually spread by the bite of an infected mosquito.

Who gets sick: People of all ages can become ill from WNV. People age 50 and over are at highest risk for serious illness.

What are the symptoms: Most people infected with WNV develop no symptoms of illness. Some infected people will have mild symptoms that can last for several days (headache, aches, tiredness, possible rash). A few people will develop serious illness that requires hospitalization or can cause death.

Eastern Equine Encephalitis

What is it: Eastern Equine Encephalitis (EEE) is a rare but serious disease caused by a virus. The virus that causes EEE is spread through the bite of an infected mosquito. In Massachusetts, the virus is most often identified in mosquitoes found in and around freshwater, hardwood swamps.

Who gets sick: EEE is a very rare disease. Since the virus was first identified in Massachusetts in 1938, fewer than 100 cases have occurred. Over 60 percent of those cases have been from Plymouth and Norfolk counties. Outbreaks of EEE usually occur in Massachusetts every 10-20 years. These outbreaks will typically last two to three years. The most recent outbreaks in Massachusetts began in 2004 and included 13 cases with six fatalities through 2006.

What are the symptoms: The first symptoms of EEE are fever (often 103 to 106 degrees Fahrenheit), stiff neck, and lack of energy. These symptoms show up three to ten days after a bite from an infected mosquito. Inflammation and swelling of the brain, called encephalitis, is the most dangerous and frequent serious complication. There is no treatment for EEE.

How can you protect yourself and family?

Avoid bites. Limit outdoor time from dusk to dawn when many mosquitoes bite. Wear long-sleeved shirts, long pants, and socks. Spray uncovered skin and clothing with insect repellent containing DEET, picaridin or oil of lemon eucalyptus when you go outdoors.

Mosquito-proof your home. A mosquito lays her eggs in standing water. Empty water from buckets, cans, pool covers and other items. Change water in pet bowls and birdbaths every few days. Clear clogged rain gutters.

Report dead birds. Bird die from many causes. A dead bird may be a sign of WNV in your area. Report dead blue jays and crows by calling 1-866-MASS-VNW.

The basics of mosquito repellent

What is it: A substance put on skin, clothing, or other surfaces which discourages mosquitoes from landing or crawling on that surface.

Why should you use mosquito repellent: Mosquitoes can spread viruses that cause serious disease. In Massachusetts, the diseases spread by mosquitoes are West Nile Virus (WNV) and Eastern Equine Encephalitis (EEE). Mosquito repellents reduce your chances of being bitten by a mosquito and can reduce the risk that you will get one of these diseases.

When should I use repellent: When outside and exposed to mosquitoes, the insects are generally more active between dusk and dawn, though some types may also be out during the day. Mosquitoes usually start to become active during early to mid-spring and remain active until the first hard frost.

What repellent should I use: Look at the active ingredients on the product label. Repellents containing DEET, permethrin, or picaridin provide protection against mosquitoes. In addition, oil of lemon eucalyptus has been found to provide as much protection as low concentrations of DEET, but should not be used on kids under three years old. Permethrin products are intended for use on clothing, shoes, bed nets and camping gear and not applied directly to the skin. Always follow the instructions on the product label.

Preliminary discussion on turbines

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

In the coming months, Cohasset's first application for a wind turbine will be before the Planning Board. The project will propose two wind turbines on the Graham Waste services site off Route 3A.

The private project on the Graham Waste Services site is a joint venture between CCI-Energy, Palmer Capital, Lumus Construction and Emergent Energy. Graham Waste business and landowner, Paul Barry, has leased the land to the developers.

Because this will be the first wind-generation project to be submitted to the Planning Board for a special permit under the new wind energy bylaw passed at the spring Town Meeting, the application papers are still being finalized. Once the paperwork is ready, the developers will be before the Planning Board for a full hearing.

On Monday night, Jim Sweeney CCI-Energy, the owner of the project, came before the board to introduce both himself and the project to the board.

"Today we just wanted to give you a little idea of what we're planning," said Sweeney. A public information meeting was held at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library in early July to give an overview of the project.

The project is proposing adding two 1.65-megawatt sized wind turbines to the Cohasset landscape.

The project has been in the works for nearly two years, beginning with preliminary analysis of the wind on the Graham Waste hill to determine if it has sufficient wind to be feasible. Once it was clear "good wind" blew over Cohasset, they began doing more impact studies and contacting state and federal agencies for permitting.

One of the final steps before breaking ground is the local permitting level with the Planning Board. Sweeney said he hopes to complete local permitting by October.

The twin turbines will have towers 100 meters high and each of the blades is 41-meters long, making the entire structure extend 141 meters into the air. The turbines are structurally larger than the 60-meter Hull Wind II located on their capped landfill on the Weir River, but Hull Wind II's siting gives it additional height. The turbines will be set about 500 feet apart, on either side of the capped landfill.

The turbines hold the possibility of providing as much as (or more than) two-thirds of the town's energy. Sweeney said CCI-Energy is interested in selling the excess energy to the town at a discounted rate and has been working with the Alternative Energy Committee. Because wind energy has a relatively stable cost, "the town will know where the cost is now and where it will be well into the future," said Sweeney.

The Planning Board asked a few preliminary questions about the project. Vice chairman Stuart Ivimey asked if the proposal represents the maximum build out for turbines on the site while still conforming to zoning.

Sweeney said there was a possibility of a "vertical turbine" directly on top of the landfill, but that would not be a part of its application this fall. A vertical turbine sits closer to the ground and is about 210-feet wide and 200-feet tall.

"I think this is a fantastic idea and I'd like to see as much power generated from this site as you can. This is the perfect site in town for this," said Ivimey. Sweeney explained two three-megawatt turbines could be placed on the site, but there is a significant wait time associated with the bigger machines. The 1.65 megawatt turbines could be available as early as next spring, while three-megawatt turbines are not available at the earliest, 2011.

Sweeney said the blades' height would not interfere with any traffic on Route 3A. The color of the turbine will be off-white, eggshell color, very similar to the Hull wind turbines.

"You should feel very encouraged," said Ivimey. The wind turbine project will be back before the Planning Board in the coming months.

Hedlund, Bradley differ on tax holiday

By Robert Aicardi
BAICARDI@CNC.COM

Many shoppers are expected to take advantage of the Aug. 16-17 sales tax holiday that was overwhelmingly approved by the Legislature and signed by Gov. Deval Patrick, but not everyone is excited about it.

According to state Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, who voted no, 90 percent of the business people who called him about the upcoming holiday were opposed to it.

"This is a state tax policy where we're inducing people to spend at a time when the United States has the lowest rate of savings of any nation in the industrialized world and we're swimming in credit card debt," he said.

In 2004, the holiday, designed as a way to bolster the state economy during the shopping "dog days," took place on a Saturday, but in response to its popularity during the next three summers, the Legislature has again designated two days this year to give customers a tax-free weekend in most, but not all, cases.

There will be an exemption from the 5 percent sales tax on items costing $2,500 or less, with certain exceptions such as motor vehicles (which include ATVs and small motorcycles), meals, motorized boats, telecommunications, gasoline, electricity, and tobacco products. Any item with a price exceeding $2,500 will be taxed in full.

The states tax holiday in Massachusetts, which carries an estimated $16 million price tag, is among the most generous in the nation. Such holidays now exist in 12 states and the District of Columbia.

> "We rip off the taxpayers all year long and around August, we throw a crumb back to them in the form of a sales tax holiday."
> — State Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth

Last year's tax-free weekend produced nearly $500 million in sales.

"Our state tax policy is schizophrenic," Hedlund said. "We rip off the taxpayers all year long and around August, we throw a crumb back to them in the form of a sales tax holiday. I fought to bring the income tax rate back to 5 percent, which was what the voters approved eight years ago, and my colleagues won't support that.

"Rather than going for meaningful tax reform, I have real problems with using this as some form of false economic stimulus. It's not. The one area of our economy that's still performing okay is retail. Profit generated by this holiday doesn't stay in the state. It's the big retailers that benefit," Hedlund said.

State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, voted in favor of the fifth annual "holiday." Bradley said it is a way to give consumers a small break as they prepare for the start of school.

"As a father of three I know how expensive it can be to prepare children for the beginning of school," Bradley said.

Bradley said the state gets some ancillary benefits from the tax-free holiday. He said consumers spend money on meals and gasoline, both of which are still taxed.

"This is just a way for the legislature to give the consumer a small break when the cost of everything is going up," he said.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Sales tax holiday: Business as usual?

The mortgage crisis continues to worsen, as foreclosures have doubled in the first half of 2008 compared to the first half of 2007. While Massachusetts has created a few new jobs recently, unemployment figures continue to show signs of an unstable workforce. Of course, food and gas prices are out of control and the cost of living in the Bay State continues to steadily climb. Once again, many are barely making it in Massachusetts.

We need a break.

Fortunately, some of us are in luck.

This coming weekend, Aug. 16 and 17, shoppers will be able to save the 5 percent state sales tax when purchasing many items under $2,500. For those who still have the means, this would be the time to venture out to purchase the new living room or bedroom set you've had your eyes on, or a new refrigerator or big-screen, hi-def, plasma television. It's like Christmas in August.

For many, however, the reality of making such a purchase sets in when you realize you'll once again be taking out that overused credit card and adding more debt to it. In order to save the 5 percent sales tax, you may be paying off the purchase over the long haul with 7, 8, 9 percent interest if you're lucky enough to have that low an interest rate.

The tax-free holiday certainly provides a psychological boost for people in these tricky economic times. Again, the thought of saving money, any amount, is appealing in this day and age. But when you look closely, it's more of a gimmick than anything if the desired effect is to stimulate the economy and get people spending money during an otherwise slow retail season.

This is the fifth year Massachusetts has done such a thing, so people are expecting it and counting on it happening every year. What that does, as most opponents of the sales tax holiday will tell you, is delay those big purchases. Why would someone buy a new sofa in June knowing there's a pretty good chance the sales tax holiday will be coming soon? So maybe it shifts the spending, but there's little evidence to show it actually stimulates new spending.

And over the last five years, what has the tax-free holiday really accomplished? It was adopted to help boost a slumping economy in 2003, and each year since it has been approved by the Legislature and signed into law by the governor to help boost a slumping economy. Here we are in 2008 and here we are with a still-slumping economy.

We need more than gimmicks to turn things around in this state. Our legislators and governor need to take a hard look at the budget and revenue streams and make tough decisions. Balancing a budget and running a state shouldn't be based on potential gambling revenue and tax-free holiday gimmicks that end up costing more in the long run because of the loss of much needed tax revenue.

Stately Mansions coverage praised

TO THE EDITOR:

Eleanor Bleakie joins me in thanking you and reporter Nancy White for all the well written, attractively illustrated pieces in the Mariner, which previewed our Stately Mansions House Tour.

Everybody spoke of them with admiration, and they gave a terrific boost to our sales and PR.

The tour was a resounding success for the Cohasset Historical Society. We deeply appreciate the time and care the Mariner took on our behalf and your help in making it all happen.

Cohasset rowers needed for coaching

To the Editor:

As CMI, Cohasset Maritime Institute, completes its very successful summer rowing program for middle and high school students, we look forward to improving youth rowing opportunities for our fall competitive program. One way in which we hope to make a significant improvement this fall is to get more experienced adult coaches involved in our program.

We know that our community is rich in adults who have rowed competitively in college and beyond. We know that many who fit this description would love to share their experiences and expertise with youngsters who share a passion for crew. We're hoping that the experienced rowers reading this letter will give us a call to talk about getting out on the beautiful harbor waters this fall with kids who want to make crew their sport. If you can dedicate just a couple of hours a week for only 10 weeks, we'll make it work.

On behalf of Cohasset's youth rowers and CMI's board of directors, we look forward to hearing from you.

Fun run support appreciated

TO THE EDITOR:

The Cohasset Maritime Institute (CMI) would like to thank the community for the outpouring of support received for its first Jack Hubbard Memorial Fun Run. Over 120 runners, walkers, bikers and roller-bladders took on the 5k course on a steamy July morning, while a trio of CMI rowers on the Common went the distance on a few of the clubs ergs.

The memory of Jack Hubbard was refreshed and will be preserved via the christening of CMI's most recent 28-foot sliding seat gig the "Jack Hubbard." CMI would like to thank June Hubbard and her family for allowing us to remember Jack through this event. CMI would also like to thank the following event sponsors: the South Shore Music Circus, Institutional Cash Distributors, Hub Construction, Sheehy & Hewitt, Attorneys at Law, Darilynn's, Catz Sports Performance Center, Sullivan, Garrity & Donnelly, Eagle Flag, Watch All, Coastal Countryside Properties, Cavanaro Consulting, Cohasset Harbor Marina, Pilgrim Bank, Goodwin Graphics and the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce. Additionally, we would like to thank all of the race participants, the Cohasset Town Manager, Cohasset Police Department and Atlantic Bagel for making the Fun Run a success.

CMI is a community-based organization dedicated to the preservation of Cohasset's maritime history and to promoting a love of ocean rowing for Middle and High School students and for adults. CMI welcomes the community to attend its annual meeting, which will be held at the Light House Keepers on Sept. 23, at 7 p.m. For additional information, please visit our Web site www.rowcmi.com.

Bike safety, BMPs and fire access

MAKING TRACKS

TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN

A couple of Greenbush items — This past week we had a chance to witness a very nice event. A boy, we'd guess about 10 years old, was crossing the railroad tracks at Pond Street on his bike. When he approached the tracks, he stopped his bike, got off, looked both ways and walked his bike across the tracks. He didn't remount his bike until he was safely across the tracks. We really have to take our hats off the both that young man and his parents. It's really great to see such a good example of safety in everyday practice.

Speaking of the Pond Street crossing, a civic-minded resident has come forward and adopted the safety islands at this crossing for planting. They now sport a very fine collection of plants that will grow and enhance this corner of Cohasset. Thanks very much, on behalf of your fellow citizens. But, there are still two crossings, Beechwood and Sohier streets, which could use a bit of TLC from one or more of our residents or organizations. To adopt a crossing, just contact the Town Manager at 781-383-4105.

A number of residents have asked us whether the MBTA is finished with their construction in Cohasset. As you can see, they are still working on widening Route 3A at Lower King Street. In addition, they have never finished the reconstruction of the Town Parking Lot, nor have they added a traffic light at Route 3A and the Greenbush Station. Also, they will be reconstructing a major portion of the North Main Street crossing at Woodside Cemetery. This North Main Street crossing work entails extending the traffic island further toward Hingham, adding a special "jug handle" crossing for bikes, and narrowing the entrance to the cemetery. In addition there are numerous smaller items that need attention around Town. So, the answer is, there is still work to be done.

Coastal Zone Management Grant (CZM) – The Town received a CZM grant for the design and construction of several BMPs at appropriate locations in the James Brook watershed. So, first, what's a BMP? BMP stands for "Best Management Practice." BMPs consist of a series of devices that are designed to clean harmful materials from storm water before it is discharged into the watershed. In this particular case, these BMPs are all variations of devices classified as "rain gardens." These rain gardens are all designed to treat and clean up the first rain that falls on various streets around town. It is this first rain that washes the harmful pollutants that accumulate from our roadways. This first rain is called the "first flush."

So, what really happens in a rain garden? The first flush is collected and directed to a series of special soils and plants that absorb the pollutants and release substantially cleaner water at their outfall. Generally they drain either to the storm water system, a wetland or to a body of water. Rain gardens must designed so that very heavy rains don't overwhelm them but bypass the rain garden and flow directly to their outfall area. But, keep in mind, the first flush will always be treated. Rain gardens, depending on their size, also hold back some of the storm water and delay its travel downstream. This is capability called "desynchronization." As the number of rain gardens increase in a watershed, a positive effect might be felt in some of our areas prone to flooding.

This CZM grant covers the installation of BMPs at Norfolk and Cushing roads, Pond and Spring streets as well as on S. Main Street adjacent to St Anthony's Church. Presently, construction is underway in the Cushing Norfolk Road area. Only the Dig Safe marks are visible at the other two locations, so far.

COURTESY PHOTOS

The photo shows the contractor, Cali Construction of Natick, at work. One BMP is at the right side of the photo on Norfolk Road, and two BMPs are in adjacent areas of Cushing Road in the background.

Little Harbor Project – Jerusalem Road – Last week we mentioned the narrowed Jerusalem Road as you head down the hill from Steep Rocks to Bow Street. We also spoke about the possibility of making this stretch of Jerusalem one lane. At this point we are seriously considering this option to reopen the road to fire emergency vehicles. As long as there are two lanes the very heavy fire trucks are not comfortable with driving near the wall side of the road. So their response time is lengthened since they currently have to circumvent area. The traffic light configuration most likely will be a radio controlled set of lights with one on either side of the restricted area. The fire trucks will be able to command the lights to change so the will have fairly prompt access to the area. This fire access is called "preemption." Of course, preemption has to allow time enough for approaching traffic already in the single lane area to clear before the fire trucks can proceed. We are currently working with the emergency forces to finalize the design of the light system.

Work underway at Norfolk and Cushing roads.

The Friday news dump

DRIVING WHILE TYPING

JOHN LENGYEL

I work from home. This arrangement has countless advantages for my wife, but you'd never know to hear her tell it, no matter how many times I help her learn how to run the house efficiently and raise our children correctly. For me the advantage is that I can mow the lawn or write articles for the paper when I'm supposed to be removing life-threatening bugs from software, and no one is the wiser except a tiny percentage of computer users, and then only very briefly after a blinding flash.

During July, however, the mean company I work for had me slaving eight hours a day, every business day. My lawn got so overgrown it was expanding into neighboring lawns. The Lengyel household descended into chaos no doubt, although it was too quiet downstairs for me to tell. And the witty introspections my readers have come to depend on went unwritten, unshared. But happily I got a reprieve on August 5th when a program I was fixing went viral and took out half the network in my department, giving me 500 hours, or about three weeks to relax. Well, that's my estimate at least.

When you put your head down and work productively for a whole month the way I did you miss out on a few news cycles, and catching up in a rush can lead to some funny misunderstandings. For example last weekend I heard that former senator John Edwards had been caught holding some kind of Tantric Olympics in a Russian tank parked at Sandy Beach, but what I didn't know until this morning is that this whole ridiculous story wasn't even true, and that he was actually in Medford getting a mammogram the whole time.

Of course while news from the outside world has been delayed in reaching me, Lengyel-oriented news has been backed up at the source. I apologize.

A big event that happened in our family recently is that my oldest child officially left the neutral zone and crossed into the teens. Had you told me 13 years ago that in 13 years my newborn daughter would be 13, you would have blown my mind. Yet here we are. And I have to say, so far the teen years are almost as sucky as my parents make them out to be.

If the stress of the first two or three years of parenting can be likened to death by a thousand small fires — the constant battle to keep your toddler from choking on a grape, crawling out a third-story window, and beating up even smaller, more innocent children and fluffy animals — I think the early teen years can be described as death by hypothermia. It's not a bad period if you've got the layers of emotional Gore-Tex necessary to handle it. If you don't mind watching your child morph from a happy, outgoing, affectionate ragamuffin into Vincent Van Gogh's most misanthropic cousin in a matter of months, you'll be fine. She certainly doesn't demand much attention. Like a Golden Lab who's suddenly turned into a cat, she needs only food, water, litter, and the occasional worm medicine, but otherwise you never see her without an appointment.

Thanks to one of these appointments Caroline got her braces off a week ago and has been licking her teeth ever since, like that woman in the Pearl Drops commercial. As a joke she was given a retainer that is completely transparent, so we're forever searching for it around the house. We find it among the couch cushions, half-submerged in glasses of water we're drinking, everywhere but over the expensive teeth it's supposed to be retaining.

A few days after the brace removal Mary got her ears pierced, proof once again that vanity can trump even the lowest threshold of pain. She's had a few setbacks — one night while she was sleeping her left stud got snagged on Caroline's retainer — but she awoke in the morning to find her ears perfectly straightened, so we all had hot chocolate to celebrate.

Emily begins to obsess about planning her Halloween costume a little earlier every year. The new record is now late July. And it's the same routine every time. Weeks and months are spent deciding on and making a costume, she puts it on and doesn't remove it for a solid week, and then we have to scrape together a new costume on October 30th. Which may explain why she's trick-or-treated as a happy, outgoing, affectionate ragamuffin with a hat and mustache for three years running.

I'll be going in Gore-Tex.

Official State (fill in the blank)

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I see where our overworked Legislature has interrupted its deliberations long enough to create another Official State Rock for our trophy case.

This time it is the Rolling Rock, which as everyone who lives at the corner of County Street and North Eastern Avenue in Fall River knows is a 140-ton boulder at the corner of County Street and North Eastern Avenue.

It is to be known forever more as the Official Glacial Rock of the Commonwealth.

This is to distinguish it from the Official Rock, which is Roxbury puddingstone; the Official Historical Rock, which is located in Plymouth; the Official Explorer Rock, which is in Dighton; and the Official Building Rock, which is granite.

I'm not sure what there is about the Rolling Rock that makes it stand out among the thousands of glacial boulders that have bedeviled farmers in the Commonwealth for generations but I'm sure the Legislature researched the subject with its usual diligence.

I've always thought of Rolling Rock as a better-than-average regional beer in a long-neck bottle that you ordered when the Sam Adams ran out. You don't suppose our legislators . . . naw! We have so many Official State (fill in the blank) that one more won't matter.

The GateHouse News Service reporter didn't say who proposed the Rolling Rock as the Official Glacial Rock but lately the Official Whosises have been suggested by students who like to startle the legislators to see if they are awake.

It was a civics class from Norton High School that pushed Boston Cream Pie to victory as the Official State Dessert over the Toll House Cookie and Indian Pudding.

But, fear not, a third-grade class from Somerset took up the cudgel for the Toll House Cookie the following year and it was named the Official State Cookie.

There's no Official State Pudding yet, if any of you kids are interested.

There is an Official State Song ("All Hail Massachusetts"), an Official State Folks Song ("Massachusetts," by Arlo Guthrie himself); an Official State Patriotic Song ("Massachusetts, because of you our land is free"), an Official State Polka Song ("Say Hello to Someone from Massachusetts"), an Official State Glee Club Song ("The Great State of Massachusetts") and a State Ceremonial March "The Road to Boston") but no Official State Rap Song.

There is a State Vietnam War Memorial in Worcester, an Official State Southwest Asia War Memorial, an Official State Korean War Memorial in Charlestown, an Official State MIA/POW Memorial in Bourne but no Official State World War II Memorial.

Perhaps the Legislature could now get cracking on the measure proposed by the civics class at Cedar Junction — the Official State Fugitive.

Who but Whitey Bulger, now that Clark Rockefeller or Christopher Chichester or whatever name he is going by these days is out of the running.

Parking signs in village send conflicting messages

specialized parking spaces benefit that business. In front of Tedeschi's, where customers are typically only doing a quick stop, are 15-minute or 30-minute, depending on what sign you happen to look at. There are two 15-minute parking spaces from 6 to 9 p.m. in front of the Village Wine and Liquors. In front of Hingham Institution for Savings there is 30-minute parking restriction and across the street it is one-hour parking on the Fleming's side. Yet, those spaces on the Fleming's side of Elm Street will soon get new signs allowing two-hour parking per a recent Board of Selectmen vote.

The signs don't even agree on what time overnight parking begins: some says 1a.m. and others it is 2a.m.

"What we are looking to do is get the Police Department, the DPW and members of the village revitalization group together to go over what we are trying to accomplish in the village," said Police Chief James Hussey. "We want to understand exactly what they (the village revitalization committee) want and make sure what they want is easily enforced by police and understood by drivers."

Following a review of parking goals, Hussey hopes the DPW could then install and/or remove signage.

Parking enforcement

The conflicting signs and multiple regulations can make it difficult for the police to enforce the rules to the benefit of merchants and customers.

"In all on-street parking we want to have some sort of time limitations. There has to be some exchange of parking for the businesses. If there are no parking when someone drives through the village, people are more than likely to keep going," said Hussey. "From a police point of view if people are parking all day it is going to have a negative impact on business."

To that end, Hussey said police officers are routinely ticketing in the village enforcing the posted laws.

Yet, with the conflicting signage there is a chance tickets could get overturned at the appeals level.

"We try to keep (appeals) out of the hands of the police department," said Hussey. Once a ticket is written, the officer can't take it back. Town Manager handles all parking ticket appeals.

Because Cohasset's busiest time of year is the summer, especially with increased out-of-towner traffic, it is no surprise Town Manager Bill Griffin said he receives a lot of parking ticket appeals during these months.

"Only a few have related to confusion with signs in the village," said Griffin. However, both he and Chief Hussey believe work needs to be done to clarify a couple of situations that lead to confusion. Griffin noted the double signage in front of Tedeschi's as an example.

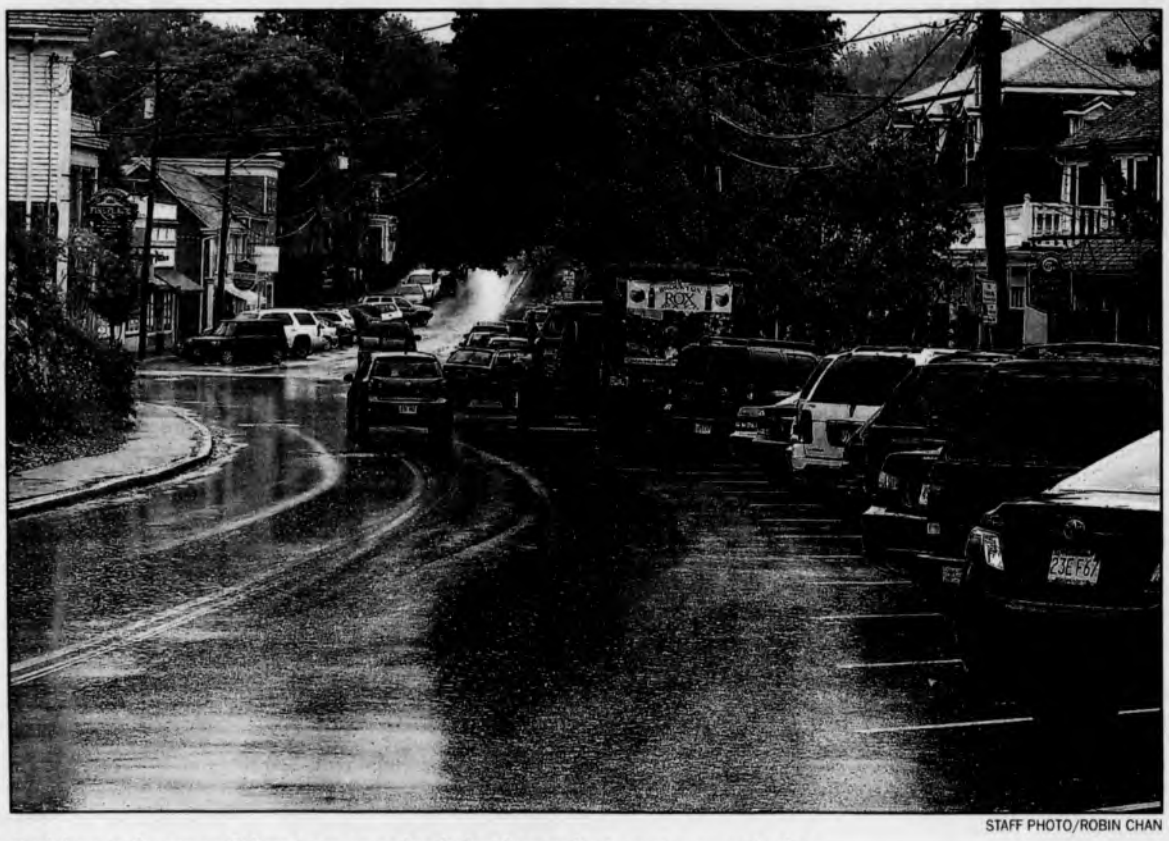
Bill Ducharme, manager of the village Tedeschi's, says for the most part residents abide by the parking signs in the village, but out-of-towners might not know (or see the sign) indicating the quick stop parking spaces in front of his store.

"Space is of the essence. But, I know they are working on it so I'll wait and see what happens," said Ducharme. He said much of his business traffic is foot driven, so he doesn't feel whatever parking issues may exist are affect his business.

Until signage changes are made, if you want to park on the safe side, don't park for more than 15 minutes on the street or take the short walk to the retail stores from the town parking lot.

Village study

During the village zoning bylaw study last summer, a cursory look at the parking situation in the village within the context of a broader scope. Angus Jennings of Concord Square Planning and Development suggested the town look at how to optimize the spaces the have rather than create more parking.



"There was a general perception that parking was a problem," from the surveys completed by merchants, said Jennings. Yet without a complete study he could not say definitively there was an issue.

Concord Square did recommend the town do something to better manage the large town parking lot with more signage directing visitors to the lot and encouraging employees to use the town lots. In addition to the large town parking lot directly behind the storefronts on South Main Street, there is a 24-space lot on the south side of the MBTA tracks not being used to its fullest extent.

"In a general sense, given the uses of the village and type of uses and the total number of parking spaces, there is a reasonable amount of parking for the uses that exist now," said Jennings, adding there were not a lot of excess spaces to handle future retail growth.

The draft village design guidelines the Planning Board and Jennings' firm is developing (see related story) encourages illuminated wayfinding signs to assist visitor in finding sites of interest within the Village Business District. Signs directing visitors to the town parking lots could fall under this category.

Jennings said the village is not alone in its variety of parking regulations compared to other town centers he is familiar.

Approximately 20-feet away, in front of Tedeschi's, there is signage for 15-minute parking with an arrow pointing left. The two signs reference the same spaces.

Further up on Elm Street, near the intersection with Main Street, parking signage indicates "no parking" on or near the pedestrian crosswalk. Yet, another sign (on the telephone pole in the background) closer to the intersection indicates there is one-hour parking beyond the crosswalk.

Ten feet from a "no parking" sign is a one-hour parking sign, very close to the intersection of Elm Street and S. Main.

Potential for new curbing around the common

Earlier in the summer, the Selectmen heard from town engineers Mark Brennan and Tom Gruber about the possibility of new curbing around the Common. In the coming months as part of the Little Harbor water and sewer project, new sewer pipes will be installed on North Main Street and new water lines on Highland Avenue. After the new piping is put in, the roadway will be reclaimed and paved with a new asphalt base and topcoat.

Over the years, the roads surrounding the common have been paved over and over; this process will remove all the asphalt that has built up over the years. With the asphalt built up, the streets are approximately the same level as the curbs and the land on the Common side of the curb making it very easy — and welcoming — for cars to park. When the paving is reclaimed, the road could be as much as one foot lower than it is now. Brennan and Gruber offered several suggestions to re-design the curbing.

Signs near the common are plentiful — there is parking signage for "senior center parking only," "no parking except during worship hours" and simply, "no parking."

Although the project includes budget line items for the grinding and re-paving of the street, it was said at Selectmen's meeting the budget does not include the cost for granite curbing. If the decision is made to install granite curbing, financing options will need to be explored. The curbing will not be installed until approximately spring 2009 Brennan said at the meeting giving the town some lead time to find the money.

Town Manager Bill Griffin said the town plans to hold a neighborhood meeting about the water/sewer project, which will also include a discussion of parking around the Common.

HEALTH NOTES

Give your brain a workout Tuesday

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The event will consist of a briefing by Gayle Walsh, Reference Librarian, and a chance for anyone interested to try out the software on the Library's laptop.

As a result of recent discussions between the Board of Health and the Paul Pratt Library, the library has installed some brain exercise software on a laptop and is planning an orientation and demonstration session at the Library on Ripley Road at 1 p.m. next Tuesday (Aug 19). The event will consist of a briefing by Gayle Walsh, Reference Librarian, and a chance for anyone interested to try out the software on the Library's laptop. We're not absolutely sure how things will work out, but we can assure you that you'll learn more about how the brain works and what we can do to help it along as we get older. Of course someone from the Board of Health will be there to answer medical questions. This will be an opportunity to observe the program in action and get some explanation of the way it can aid you in your daily activities.

We will ask you to fill out a sign up sheet and give us your opinion of the whole idea and also the way you think it may be best applied. I'm told there will also be light refreshments.

Although studies have concluded that the brain begins to lose sharpness early in life, it seems to vary with individuals and the habits they have developed as they age. Reduced brain function seems to become noticeable to most individuals when they near 50 and degradation continues. For this reason, brain fitness has become a hot topic in adult education and senior centers across the country. Since senior organizations have found that group workshops are most popular, that is the model we are considering in Cohasset.

Both Elder Affairs and Sunrise Assisted Living are providing transportation to the library as well as other groups known to have an interest.

Although we aren't completely sure how the brain exercise activities will play out, there's a bright spot about all this activity. It's not costing the town (or the Library) a penny. The Board of Health will use a grant from a local donor who has offered to provide sufficient funds to pay for the program, hardware, software and staff. The grant covers the beginning of brain fitness exercises outlined more comprehensively by literature from Posit Science Corporation of San Fransisco. It will cover staff as well as ownership and custody of the equipment. The Public Health Nurse, using staff under her direction, will manage the program. All of the personnel involved would be working in some capacity for the Town. So, this program can be considered your program. We'd like your help in trying to make it work and your advice as to how to manage and use it.

So far, brain training seems to be most successful in a workshop format. That is, those interested will sign up for training at a venue where the equipment is set up and training goes on in a group similar to the way health spas conduct health and strength training. Since the brain seems also to benefit from physical exercise, the BoH is investigating the possibility of also conducting strength and exercise training using equipment available in the school system. At some point, we will be considering BoH exercise classes in conjunction with brain fitness as part of the same general well being initiative.

The duration of the program will depend on its success and we'd like your help. Come and see what we have and give us your comments. If you think it's good, let us know. If you don't think it's useful, we'd like that information also.

Steve Bobo is a long-time member of the Cohasset Board of Health.

As of 10 a.m. Thursday, 82 people had responded to our poll at: www.wickedlocal.com/Cohasset.

Current results for parking on Elm Street

Selectmen recently voted to make changes to the parking configuration on Elm Street near Dean & Hamilton Real Estate and Fleming's. They extended the time allowed for parking to two hours. They added three additional spaces (one set of tires on sidewalk) on the Dean & Hamilton side of Elm St. closer to S. Main. A line will be drawn on the sidewalk to ensure a minimum four-foot wide passageway on the sidewalk. The spaces will be two-hour parking and no parking over the line. A loading and unloading 15-minute parking on the Cohasset Hardware side of Elm Street in a hashed line area.

With Elm Street to South Main a major route for responding emergency vehicles, some residents have raised concern with the parking and the effect it could have on emergency response times. What would you like to see done with parking on Elm Street?

Question: What should the town do about parking on Elm Street?

Answers	Votes
Selectmen had the right idea: enforceable rules for parking	27
Get rid of all the parking on Elm Street	5
Don't allow parking with one set of wheels on the sidewalk	33
Make Elm Street from Brook Street to Main Street one way	11

Ruggiero the right man for the job

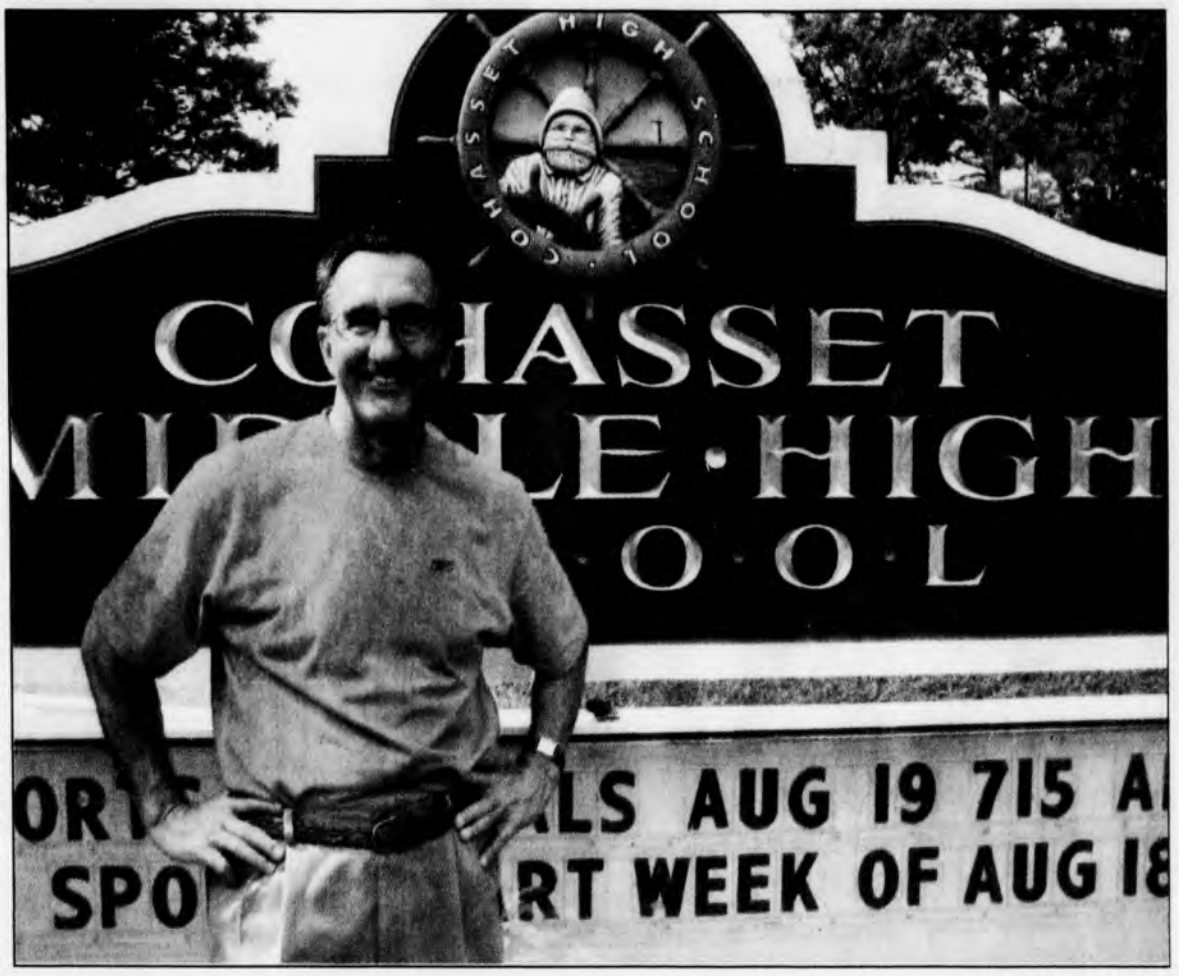
Cohasset boys basketball program lands Hall of Fame coach

By Joel Racicot
JRACICOT@CNC.COM

Bo Ruggiero likes to talk with his hands. Most Italian Americans do. Sitting outside the coaches' offices at Cohasset High School, he describes an old North Quincy High School basketball coach named Knobby Nolan.

Ruggiero jumps out of his chair as he recounts the old coach who instructed practice wearing chino pants, chomping on an un-lit cigarillo. He practically bowls over with laughter thinking about this character from his past.

According to Ruggiero, they don't make em' like they used to. Characters that is. They just don't come around that often. Which is what makes Ruggiero (pronounced, roo-JEHRO), the new boys basketball coach at CHS, such a rarity. A self-described Renaissance man, or in this case Rinascimento man, Ruggiero is in Cohasset to make a cultural basketball movement.



Whether it can be done or not doesn't matter right now. Right now the new coach is focused on the basics of coming into a new environment. He and CHS wrestling coach Torin Sweeney already have a Houdini plan to get the wrestling mats off the courts so as not to waste a minute of practice for either team. Starting over anew is something Ruggiero does best. Not that he ever needs to. Reclamation projects are in his blood.

"I'm going to try and do the best that I can," said Ruggiero. "I'm going to give them energy, enthusiasm, the knowledge of previous places I've been at, and hopefully I will be able to use all of the formula or parts of the formula that have been successful in other places. But I have to say one thing right now you need players not plays. If you don't have committed, hard-working basketball players then you really are going to have a hard time."

Local swimmers make Waves this summer

Hope Kissick of the Cohasset Swim team splits the water using the breaststroke during the girls 14 and under 100 yard IM at the league championship at the Kingsbury Club. Kissick also swam for the Weymouth Waves. See next week's Cohasset Mariner for a full recap of the Cohasset Swim team winning the league championship for the first time since 2004.

Swimmers begin season in St. Croix and end at New England Open

A busy summer season has concluded for the Weymouth Waves swim team. And the team that competes out of the Weymouth Club can look back on its most successful seasons ever.

Under the tutelage of head coach Mike Riley, the Waves' summer began with 14 swimmers traveling to St. Croix, VI for training sessions that were designed to show the youngsters that they were capable of accomplishing things in the water that they didn't think were possible.

The summer season ended at the recent New England 12-and-under age group championships.

Among the top performers were 14-year-old Hope Kissick and 11-year-old Sam Rice, both from Cohasset. Hope's performance in the 50 breaststroke ranked her in the top-10 in the nation in her specialty, while Sam emerged as one of the nation's premier distance freestylers as he is ranked in the top 25 in the country in the 800 freestyle.

Here is a recap at how the team did during the summer.

St. Croix

As stated above, this was a training trip that was attended by 14 members of the Waves. Each swimmer was pushed both in the water and in dry land training and each responded to the challenge. Every swimmer did things that took him or her out of their comfort zone as they met the standards of excellence set by the coaches. Every swimmer left St. Croix realizing what it meant to train at a higher level.

Fort Lauderdale 2008 International Invitational

This was the first major meet of the summer season as 18 swimmers attended. They did an outstanding job as there were 35 top-25 finishes and 5 in the top-10.

Among the top performers were 12-year-old Joseph Bonvouloir (Needham), who finished eighth in the 400 free (5:10.81); 12-year-old Connor Green (Cohasset), who was ninth in the 400 free (5:14.38); 11-year-old Sam Rice (Cohasset), seventh in the 400 free (5:09.66); 12-year-old Michaela Ryan (Hingham), who was 10th in the 400 free (5:20.89); and 14-year-old Hope Kissick (Cohasset), who took second in the 50 breaststroke (:35.89).

New England Open

Next on the schedule for the Waves was the New England Open that was hosted by Harvard University. Twenty-one swimmers qualified, and there were 11 top-25 finishes.

One of the top performers was 14-year-old Peter McDonald (Norwell). He had an outstanding meet advancing to the final heat of the night in each of his events. What's more, he established best personal times in seven events. He dropped an incredible 38 seconds off his best previous time in the 400 free and his 400 IM by 25 seconds, while

Ruggiero the man for the job

FROM RUGGIERO, PAGE 17

Fame more than 15 years ago. His latest stint was at Foxboro High School, where he retired from the coaching job after the 2006-07 season. There, he turned around the boys basketball program and went 117-66 with 102 of those wins coming in the last five seasons.

The stint in Foxboro included eight consecutive state tournament qualifications and a semifinal round appearance in the south sectional.

Prior to Foxboro, Ruggiero coached at King Philip Regional where he took the first boys basketball team in school history to the state tournament.

Other coaching stints include; Bridgewater State College, where he took the girls basketball program to five NCAA's and was named a two-time Div. 3 New England Coach of the Year; Boston College, where in 1979 he was an assistant under men's basketball coach Tom Davis (Tennessee men's basketball coach Bruce Pearl was the team manager, newly hired Providence men's basketball coach Keno Davis was the ball boy); Taunton High School, where he helped develop the boys basketball program; Medfield High School, where he went 132-43, and made six straight tournament appearances and is in the school Hall of Fame; and Newton Junior College, where it all began.

Coaching isn't the only thing Ruggiero does, though. He is also a businessman. He has a master's degree in guidance a bachelor's degree in physical education, but ran a successful basketball and softball camp for many years.

Ruggiero grew up in North Quincy and surprisingly enough, played two seasons of baseball at Boston University.

At one time, Ruggiero was the Director of Promotions at BU and the Director of Athletics at BSC. He also held the post of president of the state coaches association.

Ruggiero has been married to his wife Mary for 37 years. Mary recently retired from a career as an international flight attendant. That gave Bo the opportunity to partake in another one of his passions — travel.

Through the years he has been to Europe more than 100 times — Italy mostly. Milan, Venice, Santa Margherita on the Italian Riviera, the places with the good bread and the good wine.

"My background is fairly varied," Ruggiero said. "Although it's sport oriented, it's fairly varied, so I'm not just a teacher-coach. Not that there is anything wrong with that, but I've had a great opportunity to do a lot more traveling overseas than the normal person because of my situation.

"I've had a very happy, pleasant life. Happily married and pleasantly pleased that I'm going to be doing one more time what I have done in the past, what I truly enjoy doing. I get a joy out of coming into a place and trying to make it happen."

Bo knows best.

It's that simple. Anyone that has been around the game as long as he has will agree. His coaching style on the sidelines may be intense, but Ruggiero doesn't consider himself a coach as much as a teacher. And sometimes the lesson plan needs a little persuasion.

Nothing will be different in Cohasset. He will coach with the same vigor as he did when he won three games at King Philip and when he won 20 at Foxboro.

"I think that Cohasset High School indicated that they wanted a veteran, experienced, successful coach and certainly I fit those basic criteria," Ruggiero said. "It seems to me, looking at Cohasset, as an opportunity as well as a challenge, there is a big challenge here. The opportunity is for me to go into an environment with new young people to have an opportunity to teach and coach a game I love teaching. To have an opportunity to try to make a difference so in six or seven years when my time is done here, as it has in other places, everybody says we had a very good experience playing for Bo Ruggiero and we are glad we had the opportunity to play for him."

It is mid-August and his hands are flying. Seems the regular season can't come soon enough for Ruggiero and his Skippers, a very fortunate bunch.

Fortunato to be exact.

"The passion will come out in the way I teach and coach," said Ruggiero. "I am an Italian and Italian is a guy you can really gravitate towards and feel warm with. I hope my players feel that way."

From the Archives of the Cohasset Historical Society

Created in early 1935, the WPA (Works Project Administration) covered the United States and affected millions of people. The WPA was a continuation of the (F)ERA program [(Federal) Emergency Relief Administration] which in turn was an off shoot of the RFC (Reconstruction Finance Corporation-an unemployment relief effort) started in 1932 during the Depression. Cohasset was not immune to the program and the 1935 Town Report spoke of various projects if time and money allowed for it. In May of 1935, the peak number employed under the WPA was 67.

Are there stories you can relate to the Society about involvement with the WPA?

The Cohasset Historical Society is grateful to those who remember us with donations of Cohasset photographs, textiles and memorabilia. We would like to take this occasion to thank you for your continued generous support.

If you have enjoyed reading our columns and discovering some of what we hold in our archives, please consider supporting the Historical Society.

Your tax-deductible donation can be sent to: Cohasset Historical Society, PO Box 627, Cohasset, MA 02025. All donations are gratefully appreciated.

If you have something that you would consider donating to our archives please give us a call at 781-383-1434.

From the Archives is a weekly feature provided by Cohasset Historical Society.

South Shore Music Circus awards grant to Holly Hill Farm

"This is indeed an honor," said Chair of the Board of Directors Frank White in announcing that Holly Hill Farm's educational component, the nonprofit organization Friends of Holly Hill Farm, Inc., had received a $2,500 grant from the South Shore Playhouse's Community Trust Committee.

The grant, White reported, will be used in two ways. First, it will provide financial support for the Friends' burgeoning youth programs at Holly Hill Farm which this spring saw enrollment double. Students and teachers represented in programs at the farm or in local school gardens came from schools in Boston, Cohasset, Hingham, Marshfield, Milton, Norwell, Scituate and Watertown.

"Our goal is to expose program participants to the many facets of a well-run organic farm where one can experience the basic principles of nature at work and learn an approach to the natural environment that is crucial if future generations are to survive," stated Education Director Jon Belber.

Friends of Holly Hill Farm, Inc. was established in 2002 with the goal of developing and using the resources of Holly Hill Farm for educational purposes.

"The second way the Friends will use the grant," said White, "is to use it to sponsor a special event this fall, Holly Hill Farm Woods Day, which will celebrate the newly restored trails and paths of the farm's more than 100 acres of woods and fields adjacent to Cohasset's Wheelwright Park This will be a community event for persons of all ages involving games, a fun run and guided tours.

Friends of Holly Hill Farm, Inc. was established in 2002 with the goal of developing and using the resources of Holly Hill Farm for educational purposes. These resources include its active organic farm operation, its historic farm buildings dating back to the Revolutionary War era, and its diversified natural areas containing ponds, brooks, granite ledges, a salt-marsh, and many varieties of trees, shrubs, wildflowers and bird and animal life. Educational goals include teaching the value of sustainable farming principles that produce healthy food and foster responsible stewardship of the land.

Gold Award for Girl Scouts

Girl Scouts of Eastern Massachusetts announced Cohasset Girl Scouts Katie Callahan, Aisling Guinee, Colleen Richardson and Virginia Spofford recently completed their Girl Scout Gold Award projects.

The Girl Scout Gold Award is the highest achievement in Girl Scouts.

In order to receive the Gold Award, Girl Scouts between the ages of 14 and 17 must design and implement their own service projects that build on their experience in leadership, community service, career planning and personal development.

Katie Callahan: Katie's project educated people about the dangers of global warming and included ways to stop the process. She created a pamphlet that was distributed at her school and local community. She had viewings of a movie on global warming with follow up discussions. As a result of the discussions, her classmates committed to participating in a recycling program. She also created an educational display that is housed at Cohasset Library.

Aisling Guinee: Aisling's goal was to bring together the Cohasset Center for Student Coastal Research with town members, town officials, school officials and members of the EPA. She planned and executed an event to showcase the importance of the coastal research the students were doing for the town's ecological development. In addition, she created student workbooks to help middle school students learn about research protocol, journaling techniques and how to keep training records. Her Coastal Caucus will now be an annual event.

Colleen Richardson: Colleen's Girl Scout Gold Award project combined a lecture series and a mentoring program for middle school girls. Each meeting had a female speaker, from the local community, who worked in the field of math or science. High school students acted as mentors to the middle school students helping them with math and science questions. Middle school students had positive experiences learning about the math and science as it applied to the real world.

Virginia Spofford: Virginia created a fun and historical self-guided tour of Cohasset Village. She used the archives from the Historical Society as a basis for her research. The quest included history on several landmarks as well as trivia questions. The Historical Society checked it for accuracy, and several peers tested the quest for glitches. She then held a kickoff event for the local community to try out the quest. Copies of the quest are available through several community groups.

Girl Scouts of Eastern Massachusetts serves 45,500 girl members and 17,000 volunteers living in towns and cities spanning the eastern part of the state. Programs and services are delivered to girls through 28 programs centers in 178 communities in eastern Massachusetts.

ROCKPORT, MAINE -

"Heave Ho!" went the cry as all hands pulled down on a thick rope to haul up the mainsail of the Grace Bailey. "Heave Ho!" we chanted again and the 128-foot schooner headed upwind, all four sails gleaming white against a cloudless blue Maine sky.

Captain Ray Williamson took the wheel as the boat quickly gained momentum, passing another anonymous island crowned with pines and rimmed with the ubiquitous Maine granite. Behind us was the vast expanse of the Atlantic, dotted with multicolored lobster buoys.

Maine's 2,500-mile stretch of rugged coast is tailor-made for sailing. Yet most people don't have the experience to charter their own sailboat. The next best thing: A cruise on a windjammer. Maine has the largest fleet of historic windjammers in North America.

I sailed on the Grace Bailey through the Penobscot Bay Islands off Maine's Mid-Coast. The "crew" was passengers hailing from around the country who delighted in the chance to hoist the sails, pump the bilge, even take a turn at the wheel.

If you choose one of the weekend trips, you'll anchor under the stars in the calm waters of Pulpit Harbor on North Haven or Dark Harbor on Islesboro. The longer, 5-day trips take you to Deer Isle and Acadia National Park. I can tell you there's no better way to see Cadillac Mountain in the summer than from the water, far away from the madding crowds.

When you're not sailing on a windjammer, during the day there are frolicking seals and walks on the beach or dips in the cold surf. At night, you enjoy a hearty dinner - down-home cooking is a windjammer specialty - and sing sea shanties, or simply gaze at the stars.

Every cruise includes a chance to dine at a lobster bake, where you can have as much of this tasty crustacean as your stomach allows - any leftovers may show up in lobster quiche the next morning.

A dozen historic windjammers make up the Maine fleet including the Stephen Taber.

The experience is all about gorgeous scenery and camaraderie with your fellow passengers. Think of it as a really nice summer camp for adults.

The Fleet

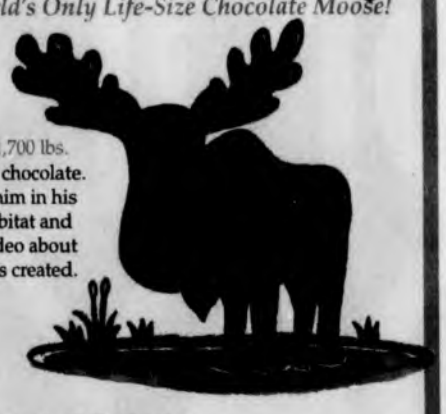
The majority of the Windjammer schooners docked in Rockport and Camden were legitimate working vessels in the early 1900s. Take, for example, the Grace Bailey (800-736-7981; www.mainewindjammercruises.com; 3-day cruises from $545 p.p., 5-day from $845).

Built in 1882, the ship sailed to the West Indies in the Fruit Trade and carried granite to New York to help build Grand Central Station. In 1990, Captain Ray gutted the boat and completely rehabbed her for passenger travel. The vessels can now accommodate 29 passengers and a crew of six.

Then there's the Isaac H. Evans (877-238-1325; www.isaacevans-.com; 3-day from $550, 5-day from $780), a historic Delaware oyster boat built in 1886. She was completely overhauled in the early 1970s by avid schooner historian Captain Doug Lee and is now in the capable hands of Captain Brenda Thomas, who specializes in family voyages. Lee went on to build his own schooner, the 94-foot long Heritage (800-648-4544; www.schoonerheritage.com; 4-day cruises from $645; 6-day from $865), launched in 1983. To commemorate his 25th anniversary, Captain Lee and his wife, Linda, have produced a CD, "And That's a True Story," based on their many years of sailing.

Another captain with a creative side is Annie Mahle, author of "At Home, At Sea: Recipes from the Maine Windjammer J. & E. Riggin." Mahle, who has been featured on the "Today" show, will preside over a 6-day Culinary Camp Adventure, Sept. 14-19, on the J. & E. Riggin (800-869-0604; www.mainewindjammer.com; four-day cruises from $631; culinary cruise $1,449), sharing all her secrets about being a chef aboard a windjammer including, of course, how to make fresh-baked bread in a wood-burning stove. Guests will prepare and cook meals aboard the circa-1927 schooner, join a master gardener for a lesson on herbs, dine on the catch of the day with local lobstermen, and enjoy dinner under the stars at an organic farm.

Whatever ship you choose, salty memories will abound.



Information on all 12 Maine-based windjammers is available from the Maine Windjammer Association (800-869-0604; www.sailmainecoast.com).

Ken Gritzan to run in memory of his son

Gritzan, a former resident of Cohasset, is running in memory of his son Kurt, who lost his battle with Ewings sarcoma two years ago when he was 16 years old. Kurt was a student at Cohasset High School while he was undergoing treatment at Dana-Farber.

Ken Gritzan is one of 10,000 runners who will run the 7-mile CIGNA Falmouth Road Race Aug. 10. Gritzan is running to raise money for cancer research and care as a member of the Dana-Farber Running Team. Along with nearly 60 other runners, Gritzan has committed to raising at least $1,000 for the Jimmy Fund and Dana-Farber Cancer Institute in Boston.

Gritzan, a former resident of Cohasset, is running in memory of his son Kurt, who lost his battle with Ewings sarcoma two years ago when he was 16 years old. Kurt was a student at Cohasset High School while he was undergoing treatment at Dana-Farber. The school now presents a scholarship at Class Night to remember Kurt. Since Kurt's passing, Gritzan has moved to Charlestown.

The CIGNA Falmouth Road Race has long been recognized as one of the best races in the nation. The field annually includes top American and international runners. Most runners receive entry into the race based on a lottery system. A limited number of guaranteed entries are available to runners who are raising funds for one of several charities. Last year the CIGNA Falmouth Road Race raised more than $1 million; in the past five years, it has raised more than $3.5 million.

To contribute to Gritzan's run, send checks payable to "Dana-Farber Cancer Institute" to DFMC, 10 Brookline Place West, Brookline, MA 02445-7226, or go to www.jimmyfund.org/falmouth.

Massachusetts Eye Doctor Helps Legally Blind to See

Dr. Randolph Kinkade helps those with vision loss to keep reading, writing, and driving

By Elena Lombardi, Freelance Writer

Dr. Randolph Kinkade uses miniaturized spectacle-mounted telescopes and specialty lenses to help people who have lost vision from macular degeneration or other eye conditions.

Ever look through a pair of binoculars? Things look bigger and closer, and much easier to see.

"Many of my patients consider me the last stop for people who have vision loss," said Dr. Kinkade.

Dr. Kinkade specializes in Low Vision Rehabilitation Optometry. He also has a Masters of Public Health and has adapted his studies to concentrate on prevention of disabilities related to visual impairments.

As a founding member of the International Academy of Low Vision Specialists he meets annually to advance the field of low vision with top optical designers and manufacturers. Visit other members at www.ialvs.com.

People with Low Vision have usable vision, but find everyday tasks challenging. Low Vision cannot be corrected with conventional glasses, surgery, or medication.

Dorothy Owens uses her glasses to walk in the mall, see faces, and watch television.

"In some states, Bioptic Telescopic Glasses can be used to pass the vision test for driving," says Dr. Kinkade.

"Amazing!" said Frank McKane, another patient of Dr. Kinkade's. "Why didn't I do this sooner. I can read without a magnifier now."

Macular Degeneration is the most common eye disease amongst the senior population. The macula is one small part of the entire retina, but it is the most sensitive and gives us sharp images. Macular Degeneration and other eye diseases often leave a blind spot right in the center of vision.

"My job is to figure out everything and anything possible to keep a person functioning. Whether it's reading, watching television, looking at the computer, seeing faces, or writing a check."

"Telescopic glasses for driving cost around $2,300," states Dr. Kinkade. "Reading glasses can cost between $800 and $1900."

Sally Konecny, age 91, reports, "I can once again see some piano music and watch Wheel of Fortune on television."

"Every case is different because people have different levels of vision loss and different desires," explains Dr. Kinkade. "If these specialty glasses are not able to help my patients there is other assistive technology available that can."

Dr Kinkade states "My patients with low vision have difficulty reading because print appears to be incomplete, distorted or broken." With proper magnification the ability to read is enhanced.

Dr. Kinkade sees patients at Newton Eye in Newton. He travels extensively treating patients with low vision with offices also in Connecticut, Rhode Island and New York.

Call (800) 756-0766 for a free telephone consultation to see if you or someone you know can benefit from his specialized services. You can visit Dr. Kinkade at: www.visiondynamics.com

Horoscope

SALOME'S STARS FOR RELEASE WEEK OF AUG. 11, 2008

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) There might still be some uncertainty about the decision you made. But a quick check of the facts should reassure you that you're doing the right thing.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) The tidy Taurean needs to be a little more flexible about accepting some changes to those carefully made plans. You might be pleasantly surprised by what follows.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) Consider stepping away from your concentrated focus on your new project for a bit so you can get some perspective on what you've done and where you plan to take it.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) The understandably angry Crab might not want to accept the reason why someone might have tried to hurt you. But at least you'll have an insight into why it happened.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) There might be some facts you still need to know before leaping onto center stage. Best to move carefully at this time so that you can observe what's happening around you.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) It's a good time to expand your outlook by getting out and around, whether you do some long-range traveling or just explore the great things to see closer to home.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) Your wise counsel continues to be needed as that family situation works itself out. Meanwhile, the decisions you made on your job begin to pay off quite nicely.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) Your job situation brightens thanks to all your hard work. Now, spend some time repairing a personal relationship you might have neglected for too long.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) Aspects favor action in the workplace. Line up your facts and show your superiors why you're the one they're looking for.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) Your hard work pays off on the job. Personal relationships can also benefit from more of your time and attention. Spend the weekend with loved ones.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) Early feedback on your project might be disappointing. But don't be discouraged. Use it to make needed adjustments, then submit it to your superiors again.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) Flattery could lure the otherwise sensible Fish into making an unwise decision. Be careful. All that praise might be an attempt to reel you in before you can learn the facts.

Fun By The Numbers

Like puzzles? Then you'll love sudoku. This mind-bending puzzle will have you hooked from the moment you square off, so sharpen your pencil and put your sudoku savvy to the test!

Here's How It Works:

Sudoku puzzles are formatted as a 9x9 grid, broken down into nine 3x3 boxes. To solve a sudoku, the numbers 1 through 9 must fill each row, column and box. Each number can appear only once in each row, column and box. You can figure out the order in which the numbers will appear by using the numeric clues already provided in the boxes. The more numbers you name, the easier it gets to solve the puzzle!

Love songs

Show goes on for Beach Boys front man

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

When Mike Love plays the South Shore Music Circus and Cape Cod Melody Tent with the Beach Boys next weekend, he just may share the stage with a family member for the first time in years. It won't be his legendary cousin Brian Wilson, however, but someone with whom Love has a much different relationship.

"My 12-1/2-year-old daughter, Ambha, will be out with us for the shows in Cohasset and Hyannis. She sang 'Sail on Sailor' with us at a concert in Washington, D.C., not too long ago and she was just great," said Love by telephone last week from his home in Lake Tahoe. "Ambha has wonderful stage presence and, if she wants to, she just may sing with us again."

Love, 67, formed The Beach Boys with cousins Brian, Carl, and Dennis Wilson, and their school friend Al Jardine, in 1961 in southern California. Thanks to close vocal harmonies and lyrics that celebrated a California youth culture of surfing, girls and cars, The Beach Boys went on to have 36 Top 40 Hits and 56 songs in the Hot 100 including "Surfin' Safari," "Surfin' USA," "Surfer Girl," "Catch A Wave," "I Get Around," "Good Vibrations," "God Only Knows" and "Wouldn't It Be Nice." Brian Wilson's genius as a songwriter and musician helped cement the status of the Beach Boys as perhaps the greatest American rock band of all time, but his battles with mental illness and drug abuse have also contributed to the group's long fractured state.

Although reunions of the surviving original Beach Boys are often rumored, it is unlikely that the legendary, only surviving Wilson brother will appear in concert anytime soon with Love, his songwriting partner long ago. Both Dennis and Carl Wilson have passed away while Jardine left the group a decade ago. Two years ago, Jardine joined Brian Wilson and his current band for a short tour celebrating the 40th anniversary of the landmark "Pet Sounds" album. In March of this year, Jardine settled a suit brought against him by Love and the estate of Carl Wilson regarding use of the "Beach Boys" name. The settlement talks brought Jardine, Love and Brian Wilson together again and the trio reportedly harmonized on "Help Me Rhonda" in a courthouse hallway.

Whatever continues to haunt the group behind the scenes, frequent lead singer Love and fellow singer-songwriter Bruce Johnston, who joined the group in 1965, continue to tour almost non-stop, playing over 150 worldwide dates a year. Cohasset and Hyannis have long been annual stops.

Bruce Johnston and Mike Love along with the Beach Boys make their annual stops in Cohasset and Hyannis as part of their 2008 tour.

"The Music Circus and the Melody Tent are great because they are intimate and everyone is up close and personal," says Love. "I also particularly like Boston as a city. It has great history, of course, but it also has great food and great people."

Some of those people have made it a point to come out year after year to see Love, Johnston, and a touring band that sometimes includes actor John Stamos on drums. (Stamos played the conga drums in the music video for "Kokomo," the Beach Boys' 1988 number-one hit from the Tom Cruise movie soundtrack, "Cocktail.") Filming on the final season of NBC-TV's "ER" will keep Stamos off the road this summer, but for Love the show will go on as it has for 47 years now.

"Each year, a group of women fans comes to see us on the Cape with their daughters. The year before last, I started noticing that while they originally came only because of their mothers, the little girls were starting to show up in beach wear and were really having the time of their lives getting into the fun and spirit of the show."

The Beach Boys will be at the South Shore Music Circus, 130 Sohier St., Cohasset, for one show on Aug. 23. For tickets and information, visit the box office, call 617-931-2787 or go online at themusiccircus.org. On Aug. 24, The Beach Boys will do two shows at the Cape Cod Melody Tent, 21 West Main St., Hyannis. For tickets, visit the box office, call 800-347-0808 or go online at melodytent.org.

Brain fitness at forefront

Computer program exercises the mind

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The brain can't do jumping jacks or laps around the track, but science has developed a way to keep the brain fit and healthy — and that science can now be checked out at the library.

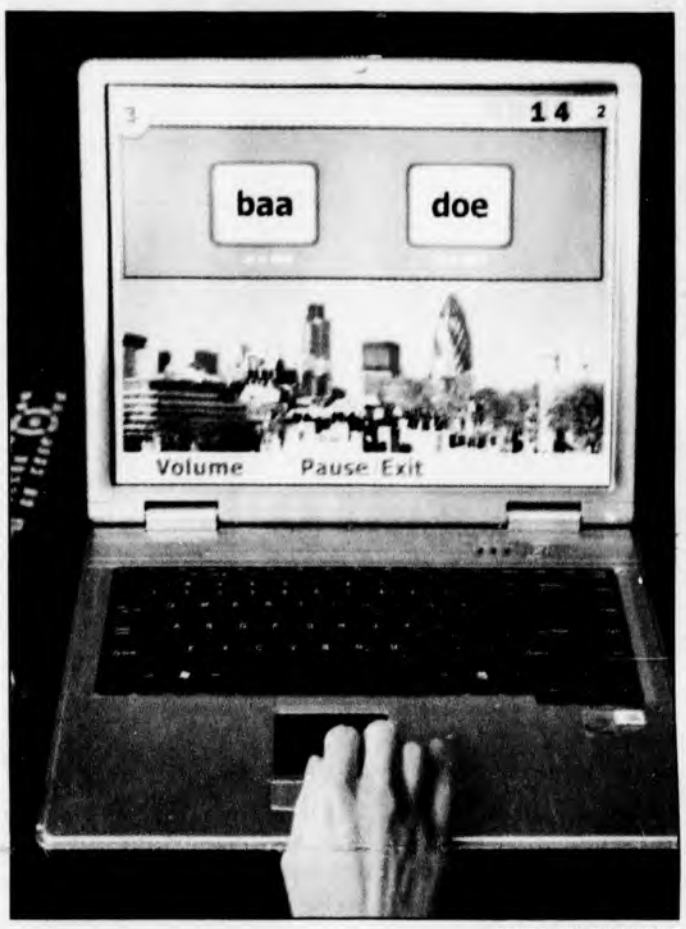
On Tuesday afternoon about 20 interested seniors attended a demonstration of a "brain exercise" computer program recently acquired by the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. The PositScience Brain Fitness computer program uses the most current research in neuroscience and is designed to increase brain plasticity, said Reference Librarian Gayle Walsh.

"The program is designed to increase auditory process speed and clear up fuzzy processing," said Walsh.

The brain fitness program is made up of six auditory exercises; each one building on the last to work out your brain in a more and more realistic listening and language usage contexts.

"Science research has shown the brain can begin to lose plasticity as early as age 30," said Walsh in her opening remarks. The computer program, which only requires mastering the point and click of a mouse, targets core functions of the brain used in real life interaction.

"At the end of the eight weeks, participants are remembering things better and having better cognitive function," said Walsh of the eight-week, 40-hour, multi-level program. After hearing that some of the seniors commented, "that sounds pretty good."



The goal of the demonstration was to gauge residents' interest in the program. Currently, the library only has one single-user program on a laptop computer. One person at a time can check out the computer for an eight-week time period, visit the library, find a cozy and quiet spot and go through the exercises on the laptop with a set of headphones. People who require the use of hearing aids can wear the headphones over their hearing aids.

Yet, the Board of Health has been offered a grant from a local donor to cover the cost of program hardware, software and staff. The grant will pay for the beginning of brain fitness exercises outlined in literature from Posit Science Corporation of San Francisco, said Board of Health member Steve Bobo. Whether a classroom group setting would be better or having a multi-user program with specific appointment times for users would be better remains to be determined.

Walsh went through a short exhibition to show each of the six exercises. The group called out the answers as she went along.

"It's meant to be challenging. It is about applying focused attention to reach your personal best," said Walsh. She told the group to keep an eye out for positive changes in their life if they went on to complete the entire brain fitness program. Bobo, who has completed the program, said one of the

One of the auditory exercises in the program asks the participant to hear a sound, or phoneme, then point to the corresponding "word" on the computer screen. If you get a series of answers correct, the reward is a visual image.

Good wind on Turkey Hill

MET tower results are in

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

In May 2007, a meteorological experimental test, or MET, tower, was mounted at the top of Turkey Hill, just south of two cell towers. Standing at a soaring 165 feet, or 50 meters, the aluminum pole recorded wind speed and direction data for period of one-year on top of Turkey Hill.

Now, just over a year later, the Alternative Energy Committee has received the results and analysis from the data collected from the MET tower. All signs are positive.

"The wind is good," said AEC Chairman Andrew Willard, but he's not just saying that — the data supports it.

In order for a turbine to be beneficial, the area must have consistent wind. Wind speed must be above five meters per second. During the interval covered by the report (June 1, 2007 through May 31, 2008) the recorded mean wind speed was 5.28 meters per second, or 11.81 miles per hour. The prevailing wind direction was from southwest.

In addition, the report calculates a capacity factor, a complex calculation to determine how often the turbine would be able to operate at optimal capacity and produce energy. Typically, a capacity factor percentage between 30 and 34 percent is desired. Although only an estimate, the capacity factor is an estimate that helps to understand the magnitude of the wind resources at the site. In Cohasset's case, the capacity factor

Students take on Little Harbor

CSCR monitors wetlands

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Cohasset has a growing group of budding oceanographers and scientists. At the Cohasset Center of Coastal Research (CSCR) multiple summer projects have been collecting data all over town in nearly all the main waterways.

Little Harbor is one of the primary water bodies in Cohasset and is the focus of one of the summer projects at CSCR. The Mariner joined up with a group of 11 students who have been studying two areas of Little Harbor all summer.

The project, dubbed the Little Harbor Wetlands Monitoring Project, set out in June to find out just how healthy Little Harbor is based on the types of vegetation, diversity of aquatic life and salinity levels. Jacqueline Chase, who is entering her final year at the University of Notre Dame as an environmental science major, leads the project.

A member of the installation crew from R.L. Lackey and Sons of Scituate had to wear sunglasses to protect his eyes from the sunpipes' glare during installation. A total of ten sunpipes were installed at the Deer Hill School to save energy costs and allow natural light to illuminate the cafeteria and a classroom.

Sunpipes installed at Deer Hill

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Deer Hill students at will have something to glow about during lunch this year. This past week, a total of 10 "sunpipes" were installed at the elementary school just in time to welcome students back to school.

Sunpipes, or the more generic term of daylight pipes, are stainless steel tubes with an acrylic dome cap placed in the roof to allow sunlight into the room below. They work much like a skylight, but are designed to be more energy efficient.

Eight daylight pipes were installed near the stage in the Deer Hill cafeteria and two were installed in a speech therapy classroom. There will be enough light generated to leave the lights off hopefully leading to a cost saving on the school's electric bill.

Mimi White, a member of the Alternative Energy Committee (AEC), watched the progress of the three-day installation at Deer Hill.

"The difference is quite remarkable," said White. When she arrived the first day, the contractor R.L. Lackey of Scituate, commented on the challenges of roof installations. They had to be careful not to disturb existing wiring and other equipment on the roof.

"I think these sunpipes show that simple things can be done to help save energy."
— Mimi White , Alternative Energy Committee

According to White, the Deer Hill classroom and cafeteria were chosen because often there were complaints about the lack of light.

During the installation, the sunlight coming in through the tubes was so strong before a covering was placed on the tube that softens the light the contractors had to wear sunglasses.

"Now, it is a really nice, soft light," said White. "It's almost like it has been there."

The installation of the daylight pipes was made possible by a $17,050 Massachusetts Department of Environmental Protection municipal sustainability grant. Approximately $14,000 was spent on the sunpipes. The remaining grant monies was spent to install 11 "vending misers" in vending machines throughout town buildings. Vending misers control the lights inside a vending machine, when no one is in the area of the vending machine for 15 minutes the lights shut off. The result is hoped to be considerable energy cost savings, said White.

"I think these sunpipes show that simple things can be done to help save energy," said White. "While we're waiting for those huge things, we can do these little things."

While hopes to use the sunpipes and vending misers as an educational tool to show students there are all different ways to conserve energy.

If the sunpipes at Deer Hill are received favorably, the AEC will look into other possible locations for additional sunpipes in town buildings.

The Alternative Energy Committee (AEC) applied for the grant with the help of its professional consultants. The committee is focused on investigating and implementing alternative energy sources that can be used by throughout the municipality. Cohasset was one out of only six towns in the state to receive the grant.

POLICE BEAT

Single-car accidents lead the log

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

• A 2001 Volkswagen Passat had to be towed following a single-car accident at 6:35 a.m., Tuesday (Aug. 12).

Police said a 39-year-old Cohasset man was driving north on Jerusalem Road when he swerved off the travel lane, struck a utility pole and came to rest against a stonewall. The National Grid pole and the stonewall, which is owned by the town, were damaged. No citations were issued, police said.

• A large dump truck, towing a landscape trailer, was backing up in the area of 112 Jerusalem Road when the driver inadvertently drove over a lawn and moved some rocks guarding the property boundaries, police said. A firefighter, who was on detail in the area due to the water and sewer projects, witnessed the mishap and got the plate number. The plate came back to a 47-year-old Rockland man, who said he did not realize what had happened and would take care of the damage. The incident occurred at 2 p.m. on Friday (Aug. 15).

• A 17-year-old Scituate teen was cited for impeded operation (using a cell phone) following a single-car accident on Border street Saturday (Aug. 16) at about 8:17 a.m. Police said the 2001 Jeep Grand Cherokee she was driving ran off the road and struck a utility pole. The SUV came to rest on a stone wall. The driver told police she had dropped her cell phone on the floor and it was caught under the pedals when she reached down to retrieve it and lost control of the Jeep.

OUI arrest

A concerned cell phone caller alerted police to a single-car accident on Chief Justice Cushing Highway (Route 3A) near Stop & Shop at 2:09 a.m. on Sunday (Aug. 17). When the officer arrived at the scene they found that a 27-year-old Pembroke man, who was still seated behind the wheel, had been in an accident. His 2005 Toyota Tundra pickup truck was headed south on 3A when it hit the traffic light pole, a utility pole and a street sign, before coming to a stop on the soft shoulder of the highway after hitting the traffic island. Further investigation revealed the driver was under the influence of alcohol. He was arrested for OUI (alcohol), failure to stay in marked lanes, and negligent operation. The pickup truck was not "drivable," police said.

Parking

Residents on Fernway, a small residential street off Red Gate Lane, complained last week about construction workers parked all over their street. Police said the workers, who are part of the sewer/water project on N. Main and Jerusalem Road, thought they were parking out of the way. They have found a different place to park, police said.

9-1-1 call

Police were able to trace a call to a Cohasset resident during which a woman, who had a foreign accent, was screaming that she was being stabbed. The Cohasset woman called police, who were able to contact the phone company and have the call traced. Police then contacted Norton police who were already on the scene. Police said the Norton woman may have had a mental health issue.

Larceny

The owner of a shop near West Corner reported to police that she had left some goods outside the night before and found them missing the next morning. She later talked to a neighbor who noticed a truck near the store and had written down the plate number. Police identified the vehicle but before detectives could follow up, the next day (noon, on Friday, Aug. 15) the man who was suspected of stealing returned to the store. The storeowner called police, who found some of the missing items in his truck.

The 47-year-old Quincy man was arrested for receiving stolen property under $250 and for possession of marijuana, police said.

The following day (Saturday), the storeowner called again after the man, who had been bailed, returned apparently to apologize. Police told him to stay away from the store.

Found bike

A walk-in to the police station on Saturday (Aug. 16) brought with him a bike he found on Ox Pasture Road. It is a black and silver Decathlon Rockrider. Police have that bike and several other abandoned bicycles at the station.

Search warrant

Cohasset police executed a search warrant at about 4:30 p.m. Saturday (Aug. 15) at a house on Carver Road in Plymouth. Police were searching for stolen property connected to a breaking and entering of a house in Cohasset a month ago.

Physical evidence police found in the Cohasset housebreak was linked to the Plymouth man. Police retrieved some items but the subject, who has been identified, was not arrested because he is out of state.

Bat in house

Police received a call from a babysitter for a family on Jerusalem Road on Saturday night about a bat that had flown into the house. The animal control officer was off duty. An officer responded and was able to capture the bat using a towel and release it.

Sleeping

A concerned caller on Atlantic Avenue wanted it logged that someone had slept in her car "last night." She did not want to speak to an officer and reported the incident on Sunday (Aug. 17). Police said they would keep an eye on the area.

Library has computer program to exercise the mind

STAFF PHOTOS/DAVE NEAULT

About 20 seniors attended the demonstration of a "brain exercise" computer program currently available at the library. The program is designed to improve brain processing and memory.

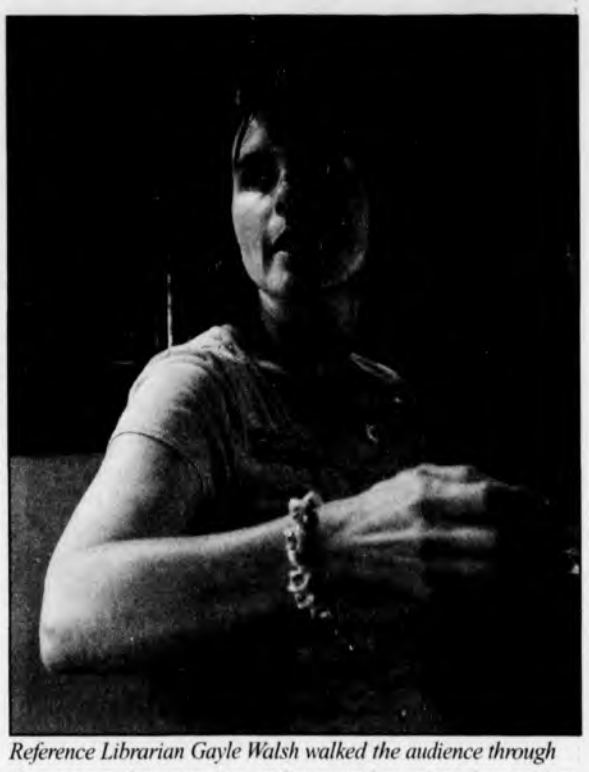
benefits he has noticed is playing a much better tennis game.



The program begins with high and low frequency sweeps of (the most basic building blocks of language) and moves up through phonemes (individual sound parts of words, such as /d/, /o/, and /g/ in the word dog), syllables, sentences, and finally, narratives. There is an exercise much like the memory card game that starts out with four items (two matches) and gradually increases to 24 items (12 matches)

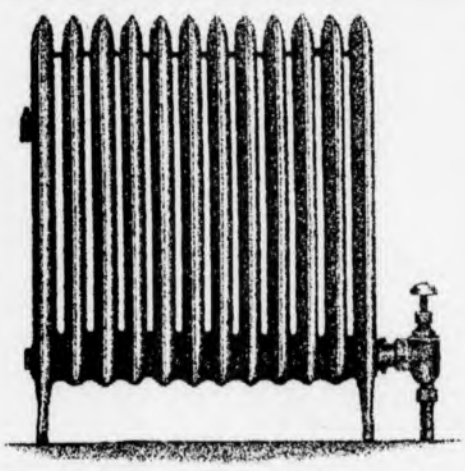
Each one targets one aspect of auditory processing and memory, while also reinforcing the skills developed in the other exercises. As the participant answer the questions, the program continually adapts to individual performance (how many correct answers, how fast the response), so the training is always at the right level for the participant.

Visual rewards, such as photos of well-known cities or short cartoon animations, are given at the conclusion of a successful exercise.

"This is the most exciting thing I've heard about in a long time," said Nancy Barrett, a resident of Harborview Apartments. "I think it is great the library is doing this."

Half of the Cohasset residents in attendance signed up as being interested in participating in the brain exercise program in the fall. Knowing the interest out there in the community, the library staff will figure out how to best accommodate it.

Reference Librarian Gayle Walsh walked the audience through the program demonstration and answered questions from seniors along the way. The library was trying to gauge the interest in the computer program and then design a program in order to accommodate that interest.



Most beginner computer users can operate the Posit Science Brain Fitness program. Mastering the point and click of a mouse is all that's needed.

HEALTH UPDATE

West Nile Virus found in Hingham

Residents urged to take extra precautions with mosquitoes

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

A crow in neighboring Hingham has tested positive for West Nile Virus, Health Inspector Tara Tradd announced today. The crow died last Wednesday, Aug. 13.

"Residents should definitely be more aggressive with their personal protection and definitely need to re-evaluate their property for potential mosquito breeding areas," said Tradd. There are no mosquito sampling stations in Cohasset; Hingham is the closest station.

As of press time, no changes had been made in regards to athletic scheduling for the fall.

Avian specimens qualifying for testing this year have been restricted to only crows and blue jays. Positive avian findings will be used to characterize risk levels for an expanded region around a positive town rather than on a town-by-town basis. As a result, a positive finding from one town reduces the number of specimens that may be submitted for that town and its contiguous towns. Specimens from dead bird clusters and other unique specimens will continue to be accepted by the state lab on a case-by-case basis.

If you discover a dead bird on your property, call the Public Health Hotline at 1-866-MASS WNV (1-866-627-7968) before you call the Cohasset Board of Health. Follow their instructions. The Cohasset Board of Health and Health Inspector Tara Tradd will assist residents if requested to do so by the Mass. Dept. of Public Health. If no testing is required, they ask residents to dispose of the bird by throwing it in the woods near your residence, or in household trash.

West Nile Virus

What is it: West Nile Virus (WNV) is carried by mosquitoes. Mosquitoes become infected from feeding on infected birds. West Nile Virus can cause mile to serious illness in humans. It is usually spread by the bite of an infected mosquito.

Who gets sick: People of all ages can become ill from WNV. People age 50 and over are at highest risk for serious illness.

What are the symptoms: Most people infected with WNV develop no symptoms of illness. Some infected people will have mild symptoms that can last for several days (headache, aches, tiredness, possible rash). A few people will develop serious illness that requires hospitalization or can cause death.

How can you protect yourself and family?

Avoid bites. Limit outdoor time from dusk to dawn when many mosquitoes bite. Wear long-sleeved shirts, long pants, and socks. Spray uncovered skin and clothing with insect repellent containing DEET, picaridin or oil of lemon eucalyptus when you go outdoors.

Mosquito-proof your home. To reduce mosquito populations around your home and neighborhood, get rid of any standing water that is available for mosquito breeding. Mosquitoes will breed in any puddle or standing water that lasts for more than four days. Here are some simple steps you can take:

1. Dispose of or regularly empty any metal cans, plastic containers, ceramic pots and other water holding containers (including trash cans) on your property.
2. Pay special attention to discarded tires that may have collected on your property. Tires are a common place for mosquitoes to breed.
3. Drill holes in the bottom of recycling containers that are left outdoors, so that water can drain out.
4. Clean clogged roof gutters; remove leaves and debris that may prevent drainage of rainwater.
5. Turn over plastic wading pools and wheelbarrows when not in use.
6. Do not allow water to stagnate in birdbaths. Aerate ornamental ponds or stock them with fish.
7. Keep swimming pools clean and properly chlorinated; remove standing water from pool covers.
8. Use landscaping to eliminate standing water that collects on your property.

Report dead birds. Bird die from many causes. A dead bird may be a sign of WNV in your area. Report dead blue jays and crows by calling 1-866-MASS-VNW.

The basics of mosquito repellent

What is it: A substance put on skin, clothing, or other surfaces which discourages mosquitoes from landing or crawling on that surface.

Why should you use mosquito repellent: Mosquitoes can spread viruses that cause serious disease. In Massachusetts, the diseases spread by mosquitoes are West Nile Virus (WNV) and Eastern Equine Encephalitis (EEE). Mosquito repellents reduce your chances of being bitten by a mosquito and can reduce the risk that you will get one of these diseases.

When should I use repellent: When outside and exposed to mosquitoes, the insects are generally more active between dusk and dawn, though some types may also be out during the day. Mosquitoes usually start to become active during early to mid-spring and remain active until the first hard frost.

What repellent should I use: Look at the active ingredients on the product label. Repellents containing DEET, permethrin, or picaridin provide protection against mosquitoes. In addition, oil of lemon eucalyptus has been found to provide as much protection as low concentrations of DEET, but should not be used on kids under three years old. Permethrin products are intended for use on clothing, shoes, bed nets and camping gear and not applied directly to the skin. Always follow the instructions on the product label.

was determined to be 34.8 percent, essentially meaning the turbine will produce energy about one-third of the time.

Similar results have been found on the nearby Graham Waste site, in Scituate and Hull.

The Renewable Energy Research Laboratory at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst, performed the work presented in the Wind Data Report including installation and decommissioning of the meteorological tower and instrumentation, and the data analysis and reporting.

The AEC efforts with the MET tower have required little town taxpayer funds: the Massachusetts Technology Collaborative (MTC) is covering the cost of the entire MET tower effort, from its installation to the data analysis to an end report showing the "quality of the wind" in Cohasset. If the town were to pay for the project, the cost would be between $25,000 and $35,000.

The MET tower consisted of two anemometers each at 49 meters (161 ft) and at 38 meters (125 ft), one anemometer at 20 meters (66 ft) and wind vanes at the same heights.

A MET tower is a necessary step to the eventual installation of wind turbine(s) in Cohasset. Not only did it determine if Cohasset has "good wind," but also bonding companies require the data in order to consider funding a wind turbine project.

Willard is currently in communication with representatives from the Massachusetts Technology Collaborative to get Cohasset's project additional funding for a feasibility study. A full engineering feasibility study would file with the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA), complete an avian study and evaluate noise, flicker impacts. Cohasset will find out if it got approval in September.

If all goes well, the town could be considering a town-owned wind turbine in fall 2009.

Thanks to the recent signing of the state Green Communities Act, Cohasset is no longer is at a disadvantage because it does not have a municipal light plant. A wind turbine could be installed anywhere in town and the excess energy could be sold back to the grid or dedicated to municipal buildings.

Before the bill was passed, members of the AEC had said the most beneficial place for a wind turbine would be behind the high school because all the energy generated would feed directly into the school building. However, that location was met with some resistance from the adjacent residential neighborhood. With the Green Communities Act, the most likely location for a turbine is the Transfer Station off of Cedar Street.

The Alternative Energy Committee (AEC) was formed officially at the 2005 Annual Town Meeting. Its focus is to investigate alternative energy sources that can be used by the municipality.

I know that this time is always bittersweet for so many of us. I want to send out a wish of a fantastic school year to all who have left and continue to leave for colleges, private schools and other programs. Please make sure to stay up-to-date on all the notices and messages that come your way for this year of fun times and events for your child as schools get ready to for all students and faculty alike.

FIELD HOCKEY

Attention all 6th-to-8th grade girls: Sign up for the fall Field Hockey program will be held this Saturday, Aug. 23 from 9-11 am at the Town Hall. Registration forms and introduction letter are available at the Town Hall and need to be filled out along with a check payable to Cohasset Field Hockey Club for $125 is required at registration. All girls are welcome to play. Practice will start Thursday afternoon Sept. 4 at the front field of the High School. If you have any questions, please contact Beth Marsden-Gilman at 781-383-1811.

BASIC TRAINING

Air Force Reserve Airman Bryan M. Healy has graduated from basic military training at Lackland Air Force Base, San Antonio, Texas. During the six weeks of training, the airman studied the Air Force mission, organization, and military customs and courtesies; performed drill and ceremony marches, and received physical training, rifle marksmanship, field training exercises, and special training in human relations. In addition, airmen who complete basic training earn credits toward an associate in applied science degree through the Community College of the Air Force. Bryan is the son of Patricia Infusino of Halifax, and Robert Healy of Cohasset.

Bryan is a 2006 graduate of Boston College High School, Dorchester. This was great news Bryan and everyone I am sure is so proud of you and your accomplishments.

CUSHING ACADEMY

Samuel K. Parker, class of 2008 of Cohasset, graduated from Cushing Academy with Honors on May 24, 2008. To be awarded honors, students must be enrolled in four major courses and earn a grade point average of 85 or above for the term.

Great work, Samuel!

HAPPY CAMPERS

Cohasset brothers Travers Craven, 15, and Teddy Craven, 12, sons of Eileen and Ed Craven, joined more than 385 campers from approximately 30 states and 25 countries at Winona Camps for boys this summer.

The boys made their summer homes in platform tents on the shores of Moose Pond in the Maine mountains. Their days were spent enjoying many of the same activities boys took part in more than a century ago, from playing sports and exploring the outdoors to swimming and camping out.

This was Travers' second summer at the camp and Teddy's first season. Both plan to return next year, when Travers will be a counselor in training.

When asked what they liked best about summer camp, Travers replied, "Definitely the sporting events that give us the chance to compete with other camps." Travers enjoyed soccer and basketball and looked forward to the end-of-day programs, from a game of king pin to dodge ball to capture the flag. His most memorable experiences at camp were the sightings of the elusive "Bat." A Winona tradition, the black-masked Bat surprises campers and then gives chase as they try to catch it and uncover its true identity.

Teddy, who liked "all the different things you get do" at Winona, was especially excited about seeing the summer blockbuster "Batman: The Dark Night," with his tentmates. Soccer, basketball and horseback riding were at the top of Teddy's list of camp favorites.

This is the 101st season for Winona, one of the longest operating summer camps in the nation. Winona Camps is accredited by the American Camp Association (ACA). For more information, visit www.winonacamps.com.

The Cohasset Dramatic Club (CDC) is pleased to announce auditions for "Godspell." Mark Bono will be directing and music directing the show. Audition dates and times are as follows: Sunday, Sept. 7th at 6 pm, and Monday Sept. 8th at 7 pm.

Callbacks if necessary will be on Tuesday Sept. 9th at 7 pm. Auditioners may sing a song of their choice and an accompanist will be provided. There will also be cold readings from the script. Mark is looking for a diverse, energetic cast of 10 to recount the telling of the Gospel according to St. Matthew through both parables and great music. The show combines many different theatrical styles including mime, Vaudeville, and improv, and boasts a truly wonderful musical score written by Stephen Schwartz. Please call Mark at 617-827-0887 if you have any questions.

FAMILY AFFAIR

Three generations of Rileys competed in the 7-mile CIGNA Falmouth Road Race on Aug. 10. Bob Riley, age 78 and running his 17th Falmouth Race, ran with his son, Brian, age 30 and grandson, Cameron, age 20. They were three of approximately 10,000 runners to participate in the 36th running of this charitable event. Congratulations to you all on a job so well done!

Second Congregational Church gets geared up for fall

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

"We going to teach the basic Bible stories and try to make it fun for the kids. Most of all I want the children to appreciate what God has given us."
— Lisa Cooper, Christian education director

COURTESY PHOTO

Since June, Lisa Cooper has been preparing the curriculum and the classrooms for the youngest members of the Second Congregational Church community.

Back to school is on every family's mind as kids savor the last week of summer vacation before heading back to books and homework.

At the Second Congregational Church, they have been preparing for their own back to school. On Sept. 7, they will roll out their new Christian education "Church School" program under the direction of newly hired Christian education director and Cohasset resident Lisa Cooper.

Combining the traditional stories of the Bible while grabbing (and keeping) the interests of kids at all different age levels will be a challenging job. Yet, Cooper says she is up to the challenge.

Since June, Cooper has been preparing the curriculum and the classrooms for the youngest members of the church community. Over the years, the Second Congregational Church has accumulated several sets of curriculum books, but many of the supplies had been collecting dust.

It has taken time, but Cooper has gone through all the curriculum materials and pulled out some of the best pieces from each. Colorful maps, interactive tools and simplified books are now part of the lessons.

"We have amazing resources here," said Cooper. She has yet to name the curriculum she has more or less designed, but she hopes the make the Sunday morning church school a memorable experience for the kids who attend.

"We going to teach the basic Bible stories and try to make it fun for the kids. Most of all I want the children to appreciate what God has given us," said Cooper. A mother of three — seven-year-old twins and an 11-year old —she has found by taking moments out of the day to "tune in to God's presence" is an important piece. Enjoying the smell of basil while cooking or the sun shining on your face are just two examples.

Unlike in past years where volunteers and parents helped to teach the lesson of the day, Cooper has re-designed the program to put less onus on the volunteers. She will teach the story of the day to all the children in the small upstairs chapel then the kids will head to classrooms for age-appropriate hands-on activities under the direction of the volunteers.

For example, the first two weeks will focus on the first story of the Bible, Genesis. After Cooper teaches the lesson of the day, the kids will do crafts, like make wind chimes from seashells or create animals. The second week (Sept. 14) a special guest from the New England Wildlife Center will visit with animals to teach the kids about respecting wildlife. During the "Learning to Pray" week, kids will be encouraged to wear their pajamas to church. Cooking activities and art lessons will also be interwoven throughout the year.

A registered nurse and part-time preschool teacher at the Carriage House Nursery School, Cooper brings a lot of energy and organization to the program. As of this week, Cooper has the classrooms prepared for the first day of class scheduled for Sunday, Sept. 7.

Cooper is in charge of the youth education program, which serves the preschool aged through fifth grade children. There is also a middle school youth group that meets every Sunday as well and incorporates community service and outreach programs. High school aged church members can get involved in a confirmation program as well as the Appalachia Service Project (ASP).

It is expected about 50 families will be a part of the Christian education program at the Second Congregational Church come this September, but they are prepared to welcome any new faces to both the children's program and the church.

"Children are the heartbeat of any church. Some people say children are the future, but I believe children are the church of today," says Reverend Gary Ritts. "It is so important to have families a part of the church; we have always tried to make children an important piece of our community."

To illustrate his point, Ritts says the role of Christian Education Director has always been a budgeted item and professional role at the church.

"Children have a lot to teach us," says Ritts. Even before the children head upstairs to the Church School program, Ritts welcomes the kids by inviting them to the front of the church and speaking directly to them.

In the Congregational sect of Christianity, the congregation is the foundation of the chuch, said Ritts. There is no hierarchy and the community guides the work of the church. Each member is encouraged to feel God's spirit in his/her own personal way and then reflect that spirit by working together.

Part of Cooper's role is to facilitate a greater town community awareness of what programs are available for youth at local churches. "As a (town) religious community, we try to work together," says Ritts. Their aim is to gather information from each of the churches and publicize each church's youth programs to "de-mystify" the issue for residents.

In the age of "church shopping," where people and families go to different churches in search of a good fit for their personal faith, Cooper says the youth programs available is an important consideration. She joined the Second Congregational Church when she first moved to Cohasset seven years ago.

"There is a lot of church activity in town, it just a matter of finding the one that you can feel most good about," says Ritts.

"The church is a really special place to me, and now I'm here a lot!" says Cooper.

Painter Ros Farbush, who has strong ties to Cohasset, has been a vibrant player in the Greater Boston art scene for most of her life.

Forever Farbush exhibit opens Aug. 22

A self-portrait, showing an intense, teenaged-art student, painted 62 years ago, an urban glimpse of a South End brownstone painted last week, an award-winning portrait of "Manny" completed in 1992—are just a few of the works included in Forever Farbush, the Ros Farbush 80th birthday retrospective exhibition opening at Oceanside 17 Gallery, 17 Rockland Circle in Hull Aug. 22.

Painter Ros Farbush has been a vibrant player in the Greater Boston art scene for most of her life. She grew up in Boston attending the Dorchester High School for Girls, where she majored in art and discovered her passion. A scholarship led her to the School of the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston where, upon graduating, she went on to become an instructor teaching drawing and painting for over 30 years. Early in her career, Ros taught gifted students in Boston public schools and in the city's MFA program. A member of Boston's Copley Society, the oldest art association in America, Ros holds the title of Master Painter.

She still paints en plain air, a method learned in high school. At age 80, Ros can frequently be seen with her paint and easel set up roadside capturing the soul and light of her surroundings…stretches of beach in Hull, coastal cottages in Scituate or street corners on Beacon Hill. According to Ros, "I like to capture the essence of the moment, a certain color, or the energy of a landscape, be it urban or rural. I want to record the drama of life."

"The paintings in this exhibition certainly capture the drama, light and creative life of an artist who at 80, is still looking at her world and seeing colors all of us would love to experience!"

— Monica McKenney, gallery spokeswoman

According to gallery spokesperson Monica McKenney: "The paintings in this exhibition certainly capture the drama, light and creative life of an artist who at 80, is still looking at her world and seeing colors all of us would love to experience! Paintings in the show feature the artist's vibrant palette and dynamic sense of composition. Many of the landscapes, figure paintings and still life works reflect her unique sense of humor and playful irreverence. People have been wondering when Oceanside was going to host of show celebrating this beloved gallery artist, and Ros Farbush's 80th in Aug., 2008 seemed like the perfect time."

Forever Farbush runs through Sept. 3. In addition to the Oceanside 17 Gallery in Hull, Ros' work is exhibited at the Josh Kligerman Gallery in San Miguel de Allende, Mexico; La Galleria Uno in Puerto Vallerta, Mexico; the Powers Gallery in Acton; and the CoSo Gallery on Newbury St., Boston. She has taught drawing and painting at The South Shore Art Center, The Duxbury Art Association, The Cape Cod Art Association and in San Miguel, Mexico. The recipient of numerous local and national art awards, Ros has held dozens of solo and juried group exhibitions during her distinguished career.

Forever Farbush Opening Weekend takes place Saturday, Aug. 23, 11 a.m. to 8 p.m., Sunday, Aug. 24, noon to 5 p.m. Gallery hours are Tuesday through Thursday 11 a.m. to 6 p.m..; Friday and Saturday 11 a.m. to 8 p.m. Sunday noon to 4 p.m. Gallery 781-773-1563, By appointment 617-875-5826 or visit www.oceanside17.com Accessible to all, no admission.

Mosquito season

They know who they are: those otherwise happy people who seem to attract mosquitoes!

Anyone can get bitten – but some people seem to get those bites more than others.

We were golfing years ago in Minnesota – where the mosquito is the state bird – and one of our foursome had more than 70 mosquito bites by end of nine holes, 10 times more than the rest of us. In fact, this same guy was a great mosquito repellant for those at barbecues and other outdoor events. If he was around, the mosquitoes flocked to him and left the rest of us alone.

Over the years, we have often guessed that this mosquito attraction was due to skin type – those whose skin sunburns easily, for example, might be more prone to mosquito bites.

But in perusing the Internet this week (www.drgreene.com), we found that mosquitoes are attracted by some body odors, and for this reason they choose some individuals over others in a crowd. Therefore during the mosquito season, it might be wise to avoid fragrances in soaps, shampoos, and lotions.

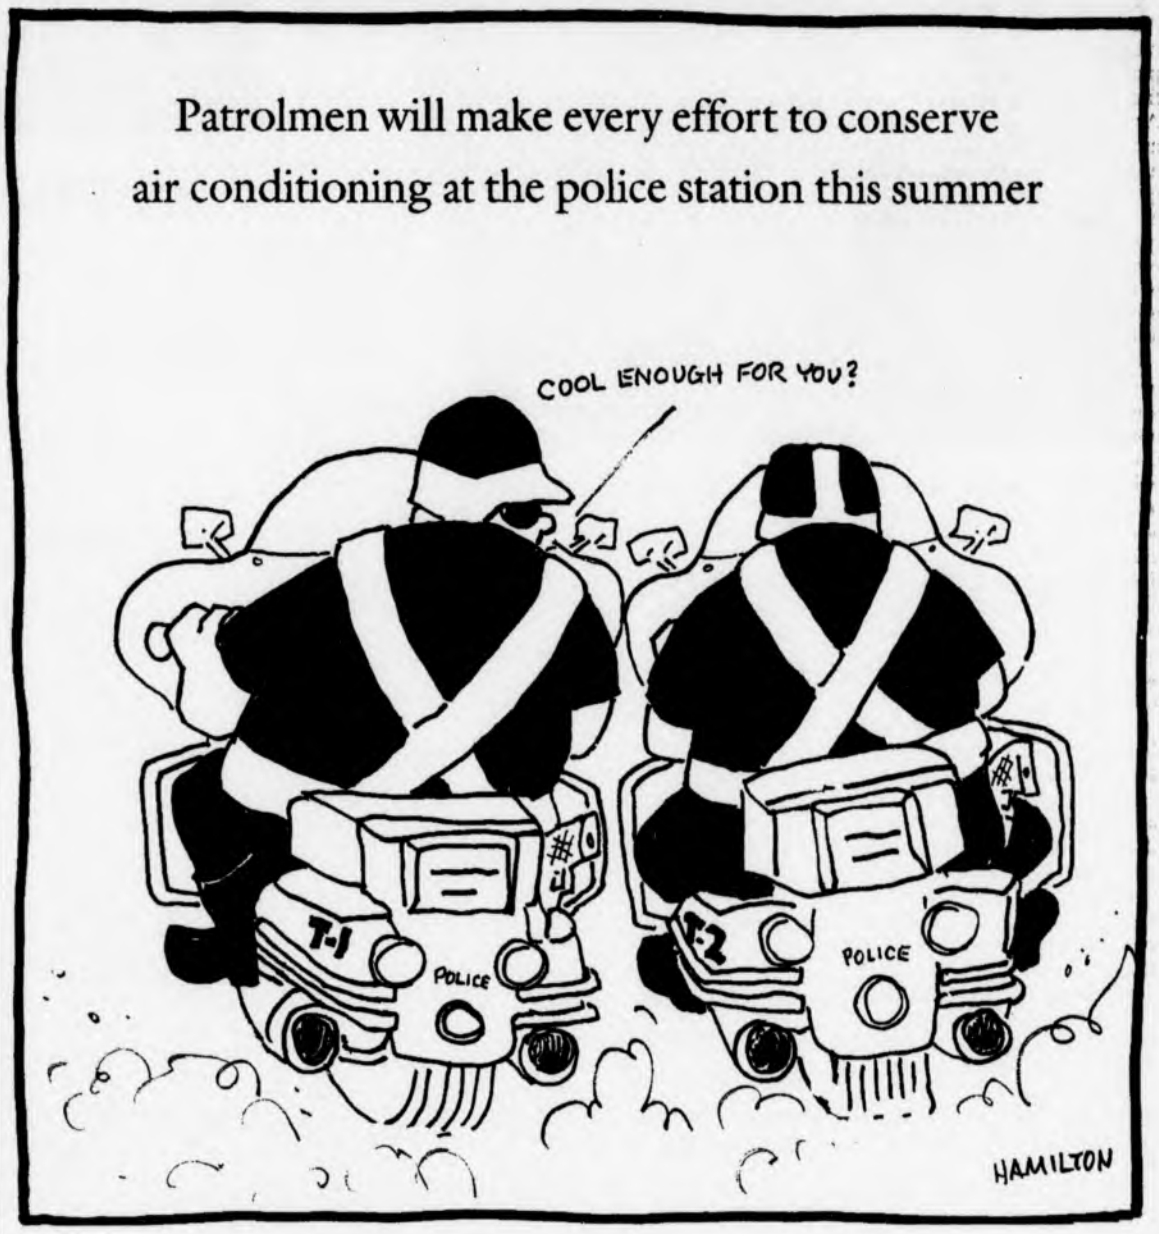
With that being said, it is important to note that mosquitoes can and will bite anyone, including small children. Mosquito bites can cause serious problems. A victim could become infected with West Nile virus from a bite.

A crow in neighboring Hingham has tested positive for West Nile Virus. The crow died last Wednesday, Aug. 13.

Cohasset Health Inspector Tara Tradd says residents should definitely be more aggressive with their personal protection and definitely need to re-evaluate their property for potential mosquito breeding areas. There are no mosquito sampling stations in Cohasset; Hingham is the closest station.

The Centers for Disease Control offers the following mosquito-bite prevention advice:

• Put insect repellent on exposed skin when you go outdoors. Use an EPA-registered insect repellent such as those with DEET, picaridin or oil of lemon eucalyptus. Even a short time being outdoors can be long enough to get a mosquito bite.



• When weather permits, wear long-sleeves, long pants and socks when outdoors. Mosquitoes may bite through thin clothing, so spraying clothes with repellent containing permethrin or another EPA-registered repellent will give extra protection. Don't apply repellents containing permethrin directly to skin. Do not spray repellent on the skin under your clothing.

• The hours from dusk to dawn are peak biting times for many species of mosquitoes. Take extra care to use repellent and protective clothing during evening and early morning — or consider avoiding outdoor activities during these times.

• Eliminate mosquito breeding sites around your home. At least once or twice a week, empty water from flowerpots, pet food and water dishes, birdbaths, swimming pool covers, buckets, barrels, and cans. Check for clogged rain gutters and clean them out. Remove discarded tires, and other items that could collect water. Be sure to check for containers or trash in places that may be hard to see, such as under bushes or under your home.

• Put screens on your windows and doors — and repair the screens if they have holes in them. Also, use air conditioning so you can keep the windows closed.

• Use mosquito netting on infant carriers when taking your baby outdoors.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Enough is enough!

TO THE EDITOR:

Sunday, Aug. 17, I pulled left out of Windy Hill Road headed to the recycling facility. Almost immediately, a phalanx of motorcycles with lights flashing came around the blind corner and appeared in my rear view mirror. I proceeded about 100 yards around a bend and pulled off the side of the road, to the right, in a fortuitous off-road parking area to either let the police go by or stop if they thought I had done something wrong.

The first motorcycle roared by, but the second motorcycle pulled-up behind me and started hollering at me to "GO, GO, GO" in a very unpleasant tone. I hesitated and the policeman's voice boomed again and much more unpleasantly "GO, GO, GO." I can take a hint, so I pulled-out and proceeded toward West Corner.

At West Corner, a Norfolk County Police Officer was directing traffic directly across Route 228 (Jerusalem Road to Rockland Street). Traffic was backed-up as far as the eye could see in both directions on Route 228-north/south). I signaled that I wanted to go North towards the recycling facility (that lane was completely open, but the Officer insisted that all traffic go straight across.

Then it started, motorcycles roaring through the intersection with their police escort and police "blocking for them" at major intersections. I don't know how long the line of motorcycles continued, but it was a long time because I went into Victoria's Restaurant and they were still roaring through the intersection when I went out and exited the restaurant. I asked the Norfolk County Policeman whom I could complain to and he said: "the Quincy Police."

When I was at the recycling facility, I heard a woman talking about what a "MESS" the motorcycles had caused at the intersection of Forest Avenue and Jerusalem Road. The next day, I heard another person speaking about cars pulling out from blind driveways and other entrances that police cannot possibly control into the middle of this "MESS."

Who is running Cohasset: the Norfolk County Police, the Quincy Police or the Cohasset Police? Because Cohasset is so picturesque, all sorts of outside events are increasingly "SHUTTING DOWN" Cohasset for our residents. We (Cohasset) are the non-profit center of the universe and fund-raisers need to be run for those Cohasset organizations, but it is getting totally out of hand with outside organizations joining the bandwagon. Why can't people donate to their favorite charities without organizing a plethora of events that shutdown Cohasset?

I will guarantee you one thing; Jerusalem Road and other winding/blind Cohasset roads were never meant for these "mega-events" and it is not a question of whether, but when there will be more tragedies.

Joe McElroy

Info session held on water/sewer project

MAKING TRACKS

TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN

The Little Harbor Project — Last Saturday, August the 16th, there was a general information meeting for those who live on or have an interest in property on Red Gate Lane, North Main Street from Red Gate to the Depot Court and Highland Avenue. The project was reviewed by the Water and Sewer Commissions as well as their engineers and the contractor. Numerous general and specific questions were answered by the Commissioners and engineers. If anyone has any unanswered questions they should call Kevin McRae the project office on Jerusalem Road. The phone number there is 781-383-2900. Kevin assures us that, even if he is out of the office, he'll get back to you as quickly as he can.

The Common area – Preparations continue as the project moves toward the Common. At the present time, temporary water mains are being installed along North Main Street and around the Common. When their installation is complete they will need to be tested and sanitized before they can be placed into service. Once the temporary lines are connected to each customer, construction digging for installation of the new water lines on Main Street can commence. This is scheduled to take place immediately after Labor Day. Because of the construction on the common, the Farmer's Market will probably be relocated. As far as we know a new site has not been selected yet. We'll let you know as soon as we hear.

The water service will be constructed first and then the new sewer system. In general, water construction cannot be done in the winter because the temporary water lines might be subject to freezing and bursting. Thus, the goal is for the water portion of the project to be complete before the onset of winter. Present plans call for the water trenches to be patched with asphalt prior to winter. Final paving will be done later when all of the project work is finished and the patches have had a chance to settle.

Another change you may notice on the Common is that after the temporary water lines are placed into service, the fountain in the Duck Pond will be turned off. The reason is that today the fountain receives its water directly from the water main and the fountain will not be connected to the temporary main. A water saving feature that will be constructed as a part of this project is a recirculating pump for the fountain. This will allow the existing water to be recirculated through the fountain and only make-up water will need to be supplied from our Town water supply.

At present, LM Holdings has seven active construction crews of workers spread throughout the project. By the time you read this, we hope to have paved several more roads. Those roads that look like they will be ready for paving before the end of this week include: Keene Way (a private way off of Beach Street), private way at 430 Atlantic Avenue, private way at 392 Jerusalem Road and Orchard Cove (a private way off of Nichols Road). On Keene Way a drain line was installed early this week alongside the road to keep the new road from washing out as storm water makes its way down the road to Little Harbor.

COURTESY PHOTOS

Temporary water lines march down Main Street.

Storm drain on Haystack Lane.

New drain line on Keene Way.

Deep Run goes underground – This week, LM Holdings began installation of a storm drain system on Haystack Lane that will ultimately drain water from Deep Run across Jerusalem Road Drive, then across Jerusalem Road to the ocean. This drain system will carry the storm water from an open stream on Deep Run. As an obscure bit of information, we are told by long-standing residents that this stream is the original "Deep Run" from which the road gets its name. Who knew?

CZM rain garden grant — The three rain gardens at Cushing and Norfolk roads are nearing completion. When complete, the contractor will be moving to construct the rain garden on Spring Street near and to the left of the large rock you see when facing the tracks from Spring Street. This new rain garden will serve to treat the first flush that comes down from the Pond Street hill and Lantern Lane areas. After treatment, these waters flow will into Stewart Brook and then on to Jacobs Meadow. So, we will have another small bit of work under our belts that will assist in the clean up Jacobs Meadow. An added visual benefit for the nearby neighbors will come as a result of the plantings to be used in this rain garden. Among the scheduled plantings are evergreen rhododendrons 4 to 5 feet high that can grow to 8 to 15 feet and a 12 to 14 foot Balsam fir tree that can grow to 40 to 60 feet at maturity. These should soften the landscape remove some of the starkness presented by the train and its fencing.

The battle of the books

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Remember the day when all you had to do to learn all you needed to know about a presidential candidate was buy a Globe or tune in John Henning on the tube or Gene Burns on the radio?

That's not true anymore.

The place to get the skinny on Barack Obama and John McCain is the local public library.

The place to get the skinny on Barack Obama and John McCain is the local public library.

Obama hasn't even been nominated yet but already USA Today has counted nearly a dozen books, including some aimed at the children's market, telling and retelling his life story.

What kid isn't going to be turned on by a book titled "Barack Obama Is Your New Bicycle?"

The McCain bookshelf is not that lengthy, possibly because he has been around longer and his travails in the North Vietnamese prison camp are well known.

The subject of books on the campaign trail came up the other day with the publication of "The Obama Nation" — "abomination," get it? — by Jerome Corsi.

Reviewers called it a "a compilation of derogatory rumors" and the book itself is subtitled "Leftist Politics and the Cult of Personality."

The name Corsi is significant because it was he who wrote "Unfit to Command," the bible of the Swift Boat Veterans for Truth that did so much to sink John Kerry's campaign in 2004.

I had occasion to talk to Kerry a couple of weeks ago during his visit to the South Shore in the interest of retaining his Senate seat and he told me his campaign "miscalculated" the effect of the book.

"It was all lies," he said. "We did not react quick enough. I would advise Barack Obama not to let it lie there."

Nevertheless, "The Obama Nation" hit the ground running, reaching No. 1 on the New York Times best seller list the first time out of the box, although the Times attributed its popularity to bulk sales.

Another biography of Obama just out is "The Case Against Barack Obama," by David Freddoso, a writer for The National Review, who castigates the candidate for his failure to oppose the Chicago political machine.

Of course, Dick Morris, a former Clinton confidante who has a thing for Bill and Hillary ever since a phone call from the former interrupted a tender moment with his girlfriend, is back with a book called "Fleeced."

So far, John McCain appears to have escaped the salvo of negative biographies — or what passes for biographies — that have dogged his opponent, but don't expect him to be ignored for long.

I have word that Paul Begala, a Clintonista from way back, is preparing a book to be called "Third Term: Why George Bush Loves John McCain."

And there is a book on the shelves already called "72 Things Younger Than John McCain." I have neither read nor seen it but with that title it can't be up to any good.

All the books mentioned here cost in the $28 range. But don't hurry out to buy one. On the morning of Wednesday, Nov. 5, they'll be $1 apiece on the remainders counter.

Missed opportunities for serious reform

THE HEDLUND REPORT

SEN. ROBERT HEDLUND

If the Legislature has specialized in anything over the past few years, it's been in missed opportunities. It has missed opportunities to inspire increased confidence in our role as stewards of the public's money by failing to reform our broken pension system, by increasing spending at unsustainable rates, and by refusing to abide by the will of the voters and roll back the income tax rate to 5 percent.

It has also, again, missed the opportunity to bring serious reforms to the Commonwealth's poster-child for mismanaged, runaway state agencies: the Massachusetts Turnpike Authority.

We could have buried the Turnpike Authority a decade ago, just as all of its outstanding debt was about to be paid off. Instead, the Legislature voted to reward four decades of incompetent management by putting it in charge of the Big Dig project. In one swift motion, the Massachusetts Highway System Act of 1997 not only guaranteed that the Turnpike Authority would be around for another 40 years — if not eternally — but also forged a virtually unbreakable link between the financial health of the Turnpike Authority and Bay State toll-payers.

(I will proudly point out I was one of a few legislators who foresaw the disaster this arrangement would become and voted against the bill!)

Another such opportunity passed by in the waning moments of our most-recent legislative session.

Last month, while teetering on the brink of insolvency thanks to another decade of fiscal mismanagement and irresponsibility, the Turnpike Authority knocked on the door of the State House, hat in hand, asking for help. It was a brash move considering that the Turnpike Authority for years had fiercely resisted any movement to reform or rein in their day-to-day operations, going so far as to have prominent critics illegally fired from its board of directors in 2001.

It's like the irresponsible relative asking you to co-sign a credit card application, after years of refusing to take any advice on how he or she could turn around their life.

It's like the irresponsible relative asking you to co-sign a credit card application, after years of refusing to take any advice on how he or she could turn around their life.

The tipping point for the Turnpike Authority was a pair of complex financial deals it made back in 2001 and 2002. In need of cash on hand, Authority officials had entered into "swaption" arrangements with USB and Lehman Brothers, which left the Authority liable for potential future massive increases in interest payments. These swaptions were brokered by well-connected political insiders.

Gov. Deval Patrick initially wanted the state to help refinance $2.3 billion in existing Turnpike Authority debt — a proposal that was quickly and appropriately rejected by state Treasurer Tim Cahill and the Senate Chairman of the Committee on Long-Term Debt, Mark Montigny (D-New Bedford) — one of the few members of the ruling party in this state that has long-understood what a disaster the Turnpike Authority has been.

My Senate colleagues crafted a different bailout plan that didn't involve the state putting us deeper on the hook. However, I felt we should simply not be tossing the Turnpike Authority a lifeline; that by asking for a state bailout it had lost its right to operate independently, if not exist altogether.

As a result, I co-sponsored a number of amendments that would have, among other things, required the abolishment of the Turnpike Authority by next July, required the Authority to pay off some of its debt by selling off some of the hundreds of millions in land it owns, and implemented one-way tolling between Boston and Newton. This latter step would have resulted in a significant cut in operating expenses (salaries for toll collectors, maintenance of toll plazas, etc.) while cutting down on accidents, and eliminating hundreds of tons of tailpipe pollutants emitted while waiting in traffic.

Naturally, these amendments received little support from the majority party. And considering that Gov. Patrick subsequently vetoed the only reform measures contained within our bailout plan — the creation of a special task force to decide the future viability of the Turnpike Authority, and a required inventory of all Turnpike assets — we essentially have given the Authority yet another free pass.

So now talk will continue about whether toll hikes will be needed along the MassTurnpike and at the airport tunnels to continue to pay for toll collectors who make $75,000 and sign hangers that make $100,000. This atop the threats of additional MBTA fare hikes, gas tax hikes to pay for roadway projects, and more Proposition 2–1/2 override votes.

It's no wonder voters are eagerly eyeing a chance to vote to eliminate the state income tax this November. Because no matter what challenges we face, we keep letting opportunities for change slip right on by.

State Senator Robert Hedlund represents the Plymouth-Norfolk District that includes: Weymouth, Hingham, Hull, Cohasset, Scituate, Marshfield, Norwell and Duxbury.

Relief for Aquarion customers a ways off

Residential customers in Hingham, Hull and North Cohasset are seeing an increase of about $24.25 per quarter or $100 annually.

While water rates have not changed, the clock ran out in January on a 10-year rebate program approved in 1998 that affects customers of Aquarion Water Company of Massachusetts.

Residential customers in Hingham, Hull and North Cohasset are seeing an increase of about $24.25 per quarter or $100 annually. That means the amount the average customer pays has gone from about $549 to $646 per year.

This is unrelated to the application that Aquarion Water Company has filed with the Massachusetts Department of Public Utilities requesting an approximate $3.1 million, or an overall 24.8 percent, increase in water service revenues.

Senator Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, said he is disappointed in Governor Deval Patrick's decision to veto grant money that could have provided rate relief to Aquarion water customers in the three towns.

"Prior Democratic leadership, along with Gov. Bill Weld, recognized the financial burden that complying with the federal Safe Water Drinking Act would have on ratepayers and agreed to set up this grant program to help offset the cost of construction," Sen. Hedlund said. "Residents are already saddled with high property tax and utility bills. I am disappointed that Gov. Patrick did not see the value of maintaining state assistance to 12,500 overburdened homeowners and small business owners in Hull, Hingham and Cohasset."

But state Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, said the governor vetoed the grant money because it was part of the Environmental Bond Bill. The governor does not believe in funding operating expenses with bond money, Bradley explained.

"I worked hard to get this provision included in the Environmental Bond Bill and obviously would have liked to have seen it signed," Bradley said. "However, I am encouraged that the Governor noted that a bill is pending which, according to him, would be a better way of reauthorizing the program. The bill is currently pending in the Senate and I await its passage"

Bradley and Hedlund are sponsoring legislation that would extend the reimbursement program for another 10 years. Bradley said the governor had indicated he would sign that bill, which is currently before the Senate Ways & Means Committee.

"A lot of hard work went into creating this program 10 years ago, and an equally hard amount of work by myself and a number of my legislative colleagues went into finding a way maintain this assistance," Sen. Hedlund said. "This is critical rate relief for my district and, despite the Governor's action, I will continue to fight for it."

If Aquarion obtains DPU approval for its rate increase — the increase would mean an additional $130 jump in the average home water bill.

Grandfathered communities

Back in the 1990s state Sen. Robert Hedlund and then state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray worked to grandfather in communities that had already built treatment plants to meet federal safe water act standards to receive reimbursements for certain costs.

The grant helped subsidize the construction of the district's $37 million water treatment plant that was needed to bring the district into compliance with the federal Safe Drinking Water Act. The rebate helped offset what are some of the highest water rates in the nation.

Aquarion's predecessor, Mass-American Water Company, built treatment plant in Hingham that came on line in 1996.

The Massachusetts legislation made $8 million available annually for 10 years for reimbursement through a line item in the state budget. The federal government reimbursed the state for no more than 50 percent of that amount.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. Beacon Hill Roll Call records local representatives and senators' votes on four roll calls from prior legislative sessions. There were no roll call votes in the House or Senate last week.

$390,000 FOR SCHOOL HEALTH SERVICES (H 4900)

House 148-9, Senate 38-0, overrode Gov. Deval Patrick's $390,000 reduction (from $17,457,134 to $17,067,134) in funding for school health services and school-based health centers in public and private schools. The services include incorporating tobacco prevention and cessation activities, nutrition and wellness programs and obesity prevention programs into school curriculum. Override supporters said that these services also fund placement of trained nurses in many public and private schools across the state and noted that these nurses are very important to many students who do not see a doctor regularly. They said that the $390,000 cut is irresponsible and argued that these are important programs that help thousands of children. In his veto message, the governor said, "I am reducing this item to the amount projected to be necessary." (A "Yes" vote is for the $390,000. A "No" vote is against the $390,000).

Senator: Y — Representative: Y

$3,028,812 FOR FIRE SERVICES (H 4900)

House 142-15 Senate 33-0, overrode Gov. Patrick's $3,028,812 reduction (from $19,398,315 to $16,369,503) for fire services including $1,150,000 for the Boston, Cambridge and Everett Fire Department Hazardous Material Response Teams and $1,750,000 for the Boston Fire Department training academy. Override supporters said that the cuts would hurt these cities' ability to respond to dangerous hazardous material situations and to train recruits to become firefighters. They noted that the $3,028,812 would come from an assessment on fire insurance companies and not from taxpayers' pockets. In his veto message, Patrick said that he is "striking language which earmarks funding for programs not recommended." (A "Yes" vote is for the $3,028,812. A "No" vote is against the $3,028,812).

Senator: Y — Representative: Y

$2,220,000 FOR YOUTH PROGRAMS (H 4900)

House 145-12, Senate 35-2, overrode Gov. Patrick's $2,220,000 reduction (from $5,845,000 to $3,625,000) in funding for grants to boys' and girls' clubs. The reduction also attempted to eliminate grants to individual organizations across the state including several YMCAs and YWCAs. Override supporters said that these groups provide valuable services to thousands of children. They argued that the reduction is irresponsible and noted that the groups rely on these grants. In his veto message, Patrick said, "I am striking language which earmarks funding for programs not recommended, and I am reducing this item to the amount projected to be necessary." (A "Yes" vote is for the $2,220,000. A "No" vote is against the $2,220,000).

Senator: N — Representative: Y

SUPPORT U.S. SUPREME COURT DECISION ON GUNS (H 5029)

House 115-40, approved resolutions supporting the opinion of the U.S. Supreme Court recognizing that the Second Amendment to the U.S. Constitution protects an individual's civil right to possess a firearm unconnected with service in a militia and supports his or her right to use a firearm for self-defense within the home. Supporters said that the Legislature should go on record in favor of this landmark ruling that once and for all recognizes that an individual has a constitutional right to carry a gun. Opponents said that they disagree with the court's interpretation of the Second Amendment and argued that they still believe that it applies only to the militia. (A "Yes" vote is for resolutions supporting the opinion of the Supreme Court. A "No" vote is against the resolutions).

Representative: Y

REPLACE NATIONAL POPULAR VOTE PROPOSAL WITH A STUDY (H 4952)

Senate 9-27, rejected a proposal that would require the state's congressional delegation to study whether the Electoral College should be abolished and replaced with a national popular vote through the passage of an amendment to the U.S. Constitution. The study proposal was offered to replace a bill that would make Massachusetts a member of The Agreement among the States to Elect the President by National Popular Vote. The agreement would require states that join the pact to cast all of their electoral votes for the presidential candidate who wins a majority of the national popular vote in all 50 states and the District of Columbia. The pact would become effective when states representing at least 270 electoral votes - a majority of the 538-vote Electoral College - join this compact. Some supporters of the study said that the Electoral College system has good points and bad points and urged that the issue be studied more. Others said that the Electoral College is a good system that has worked well and should not be changed. They argued that the Electoral College actually gives voters in smaller states power that they would not have if the president was elected strictly by a popular vote system in which candidates would concentrate on states with larger populations. Most opponents of the study support making Massachusetts a member of national popular vote agreement and noted that the study is simply an attempt by opponents of the pact to defeat the original bill. They argued that the Electoral College is an antiquated system that gives voters in states with a large number of electoral votes more voting power than those in other states and was designed by the framers because they did not trust the common citizen to vote correctly. They argued that presidential candidates concentrate on and campaign in a handful of swing states while ignoring most of the states that are already solidly Democratic or Republican. The Senate later approved the bill and sent it back to the House which gave it final approval. The Senate has yet to give the measure final approval. (A "Yes" vote is for the study. A "No" vote is against the study).

Senator: Y

ALSO UP ON BEACON HILL

DAIRY FARMS (H 5030) - Gov. Patrick signed into law a bill to help dairy farmers in Massachusetts. The measure provides tax credits for dairy farmers when milk prices, regulated by the federal government, are insufficient to cover the farmers' cost of producing the product. Other provisions establish a low interest, state subsidized bank loan program for dairy farmers; create a Massachusetts Dairy Promotion Board to promote the state's dairy industry and allow cities and towns to opt out of a current state law that requires communities to charge farmers a tax on their machinery, equipment and animals. Supporters say that the 186 dairy farms in the state are struggling and would benefit from the new law.

Y = Yes; N = No, NV = No Vote

HEALTH NOTES

Setting the record straight on idling

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

In July, Health Notes published an article about idling; cars, that is. Using data taken from the American Lung Association (ALA), we said that if you're waiting at a stoplight for more than 10 seconds, you should shut off the car. Well, we got called about it by a senior mechanic at the Cohasset DPW, a man whom every one respects and who knows more about internal combustion engines than perhaps anyone in Town. He told me that the article was wrong, that modern cars are all fuel injected and have a start enrichment valve which gives the engine a shot of gas thus reducing fuel efficiency during startup.

What one should do is shift to neutral so the car's computer feeds the minimum fuel possible to the engine. Then shift back when the light turns green. Well, the ALA may know about lungs, but they don't know much about modern cars. Turns out their data was from an earlier (ca.1995) Federal publication. Moreover, cutting off the engine in traffic just seemed like a bad idea on the face of it. We later found a more reasonable set of guidelines from the Department of Energy that has a web page on the subject: [www.eere.energy.gov/afdc/vehicles/idle_reduction.html] on reducing vehicle idling which is at once more simple for us civilians and more complete for those with bigger (commercial) vehicles. The July Health notes should have listed the following idling guidelines:

Things every driver can do to reduce idling:

• Turn off your engine when parked or stopped (except in traffic) for more than a minute.

What one should do is shift to neutral so the car's computer feeds the minimum fuel possible to the engine.

• Consider the purchase of a hybrid electric vehicle, which limits idling at traffic stops.

• Avoid using a remote vehicle starter, which encourages unnecessary idling.

• Avoid drive-thru's: walk inside instead.

• Encourage your local schools to enforce a no-idle zone for school buses and personal vehicles.

Also, in July, we talked about other habits we see in vehicles (we mentioned talking and texting on cell phones while driving as an example). "Multitasking may be OK, but – in cars?"

Driver distractions

Here's what the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA) says about driver distractions:

"Driver distractions are the leading cause of most vehicle crashes and near-crashes. 80 percent of crashes and 65 percent of near-crashes involve some form of driver distraction. The distraction occurred within three seconds before the vehicle crash!

According to a NHTSA and Virginia Tech Transportation Institute study, the principal actions that cause distracted driving and lead to vehicle crashes are:

• Cell phone use.

• Reaching for a moving object inside the vehicle.

• Looking at an object or event outside of the vehicle.

• Reading.

• Applying makeup.

Drivers who engage more frequently in distracted driving are more likely to be involved in a vehicle crash or near-crash.

"Dial D" for Disaster

"Cell phone use while driving has increased so significantly within the last few years that at any typical daytime moment as many as 10 percent of drivers are using either a hand-held or hands-free phone. Studies have shown that driving performance is lowered and the level of distraction is higher for drivers who are engaged in cell phone conversations. The use of a hands-free device does not lower distraction levels. The percentage of vehicle crashes and near-crashes attributed to dialing is nearly identical to the number associated with talking or listening.

"Make and finish your cell phone calls before you start your vehicle and drive. If your phone rings while you are driving, let your voicemail pick up the call. If you must answer your phone, pull over to a safe location and park before using your cell phone."

A word about elderly drivers: Last week, an article about elder drivers appeared in a local periodical. The BoH position is as follows: As drivers become older, they lose the ability to perceive important clues to dangerous roadway situations. Loss of perception is particularly serious above age 80. Elders should recognize that they are losing cognitive skills and either get periodic testing and training or change their driving habits. Don't wait for State regulations or an accident to change your plans.

ONLINE POLL RESULTS

What would you like to see done at the Teen Center/"Garage"? As of yesterday morning 106 people responded to our on-line poll. For this week's poll on village parking see page 10.

Plans are in the works to renovate the old section of Town Hall.

At a recent Selectmen's meeting, the Elder Affairs expressed interest in re-locating to a larger space to accommodate the growing needs of the seniors in the community. Currently housed in cramp quarters in the South Shore Community Center, which is also growing, the seniors are in dire need of a new space. Of all the town buildings, Elder Affairs representatives said the Recreation Department's Teen Center, or the 'Garage' is the most underutilized space. The Garage is located near the Red Lion Inn and the town parking lot.

The building is in need of renovation and the Senior Center would require a kitchen in order to cook and serve their lunches. Elder Affairs presented preliminary ideas to knock down the current structure, which is nearly 70 years old, and construct a new building. The new building could be shared by the Senior Center and the Recreation Department as an intergenerational building. They proposed creating four residential affordable housing apartments on the second floor.

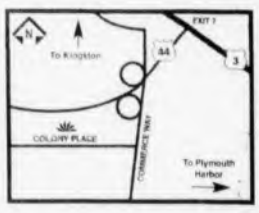
Absentee ballots available for State Primary

Absentee ballots for the State Primary on Tuesday, Sept. 16, are now available at the Town Clerk's office. Absentee voting may be done during normal office hours until noontime on Monday, Sept. 15, at which time the office will be closed to prepare for the election. Residents should vote in person on Election Day if in town and able to come to the polls. People may vote absentee for the following reasons only:

1. Absence from the town during the hours the polls is open.
2. Physical disability.
3. Religious beliefs, which prevent voting at the polls on Election Day.



The applicant must request an absentee ballot. Applications are available in the Town Clerk's office or a written, signed request can be sent by mail, or hand delivered by the voter or any other person. The application should include the legal voting address of the voter, which ballot is requested, Democrat, Republican, Green-Rainbow or Working Families, where the ballot is to be mailed, and the signature of the applicant. If a voter is Unenrolled (Independent) he needs to choose a ballot and will remain unenrolled after the primary. Those enrolled in a party must vote that ballot. Changing party affiliation must be done on or before Aug. 27.

A family member of a person qualified to vote by absentee ballot may apply on behalf of such voter. The applicant shall state his or her relationship to the absentee voter; sign the application under the pains and penalties of perjury and mail or hand deliver the application to the clerk's office. Absentee ballots must be mailed to the voter. Returned ballots should be mailed or can be delivered by an immediate member of the family to the Town Clerk's office by Sept. 16 to be counted.

The town will be using the Accu-Vote optical scan system. Instructions to voters are printed on the ballot and any pen or pencil may be used. To vote, completely fill in the oval to the right of one's choice. Secrecy sleeves are available at the check in tables. The ballots can be inserted into the machine face up, face down, etc. and will be read. It is the usual policy to flip the ballot over so the blank side shows as it is inserted into the machine. Voters who are uncomfortable with this should use the secrecy sleeve.

Those who are permanently physically disabled and cannot cast a vote at the polling place, may file a letter from a physician with the Town Clerk stating that one is permanently unable to cast a vote at the polling place because of physical disability. A completed application for an absentee ballot to sign and return will be mailed by the Town Clerk at least 28 days before every primary and election.

Last spring was a busy for Cohasset Boy Scout Troop 28. The troop honed their rock climbing and archery skills, hiked miles in the Blue Hills Reservation and camped at the Arthur Lehr Campground while working on rank advancement.

The activity started April 11 with a trip to the Boston Rock Gym in Woburn where there was a variety of climbing terrains, with more than 40 ropes and dedicated bouldering areas, to challenge every Scout. Organized and led by Life Scout Christian Quebec, troop members Robbie Hillman, Andrew Leighton, Brodie Jackisch, Derek Benson, Jack Thomae, Tucker Oddleifson, Jay Salerno, Kevin Mack, Thomas Fogarty, Hugh Gideon-Murphy, Alex Kent, and Greg Berube spent the evening testing their rocking climbing skills and pushing their capabilities to new heights.

On the weekend of April 26 and 27, the troop set up base camp at Camp Sayre adjacent to the 7,000 acre Blue Hills Reservation. The nearby Blue Hills Reservation stretches over 7,000 acres from Quincy to Dedham, Milton to Randolph, and has more than 125 miles of trails. A contingent of nine Scouts hiked about 10 miles over many of the rocky summits in the reservation. As many of the trails and junctions are not well marked, map and compass skills were required to ensure the team was headed in the right direction. Fortunately, the hikers did not run into any coyotes or copperheads that call the Blue Hills Reservation home. The trip was organized by Life Scout Tucker Oddleifson. Meals were planned and cooked by Greg Berube. Robbie Hillman, Brodie Jackisch, Andrew Leighton. Jay Salerno, Derek Benson, Jack Thomae and Morgan McCarthy also enjoyed the trip.

Life Scout Graham Sinclaire led a trip to the Troop 28 Arthur Lehr Campground, between Wheelwright Park and the Barnes Wildlife Sanctuary on May 17 and 18. The weekend was planned to include a lot of Second Class and First Class rank skill building and testing. Many of the requirements were related to cooking so the Scouts enjoyed a lot of wholesome food. Several Scouts created an orienteering course for one of the First Class rank requirements. Paul Pozniak, Christian Quebec, Andrew Leighton, Robbie Hillman, Blake Erler, Jack O'Brien, Derek Benson, Alec Hurd, Julien Geyer and Thomas Fogarty attended this trip and were successful in rank advancement.

A day trip planned and led by Star Scout Robbie Hillman brought the troop to Archery USA in Dedham where the Scouts enjoyed a morning of archery instruction, practice and competition. An experienced archer taught the Scouts safety aspects and techniques. Every Scout improved their performance over the course of the morning as they each had their own target and were able to shoot many arrows. In addition to Robbie, Julien Geyer, Kevin Mack, Sasha Nakashima, Hugh Gideon-Murphy, Brodie Jackisch, Derek Benson, Andrew Leighton, Tucker Oddleifson, Morgan McCarthy, Jack Thomae and Thomas Fogarty made the trip.

Troop 28 hosted its Spring Court of Awards on Thursday June 5, at the Lightkeepers House where the Scouts were awarded new ranks and merit badges.

Troop 28 welcomes boys 11 through 17 who are interested in outdoor adventure, service opportunities and fun. Anyone interested should email troop28scoutmaster@comcast.net or visit the Web site at troop28cohasset.org.

McGee Pre-Owned Superstore On Route 139 In Pembroke To Sell Vehicles for Just $99* Per Month!

South Shore Auto Buyers Can Save Thousands During 4-Day $99 Per Month Vehicle Sale Thursday, August 21st Through Sunday, August 24th

National liquidation firm will be at McGee Pre-Owned Superstore on Route 139 beginning this Thursday for 4-days only and will slash prices by thousands of dollars.

Dan Ready
Staff Writer

PEMBROKE, MA — Mr. Rob McGee, Owner of McGee Pre-Owned Superstore on Route 139, announced today that he has hired a national vehicle liquidation firm to conduct what will be one of the biggest car-buying events ever held on the South Shore. During this 4-Day liquidation, the general public will have an opportunity to purchase select Pre-Owned vehicles for just $99 per month! The event is called a $99 Vehicle Sale due to the fact that authorized personnel will be literally slashing prices on all Pre-Owned vehicles with the goal of selling them all in just 4-days. Vehicles will literally sell for as little as $99 per month! Due to the nature of this event dealers and wholesalers are prohibited. The event will be held for 4-Days only; Thursday, August 21st through Sunday, August 24th, regardless of any weather conditions that may arise.

Chevrolets will be available and priced as low as $99* per month"

McGee offers a simple explanation for this unprecedented sale, "As one of the South Shore's most successful Toyota & Chevrolet dealers, we have experienced record-breaking sales of new vehicles at our Toyota & Chevrolet locations this summer. We now have over 200 recent trade-ins that we must liquidate immediately to make room for our 2009 model year shipments, scheduled to begin arriving next week. In an effort to clear our Toyota & Chevrolet dealership locations of all excess trade-in vehicles, we have hired a national vehicle liquidation firm whose team has been hired to transport all trade-ins from our other locations to our Pre-Owned Superstore located on Route 139 in Pembroke. They have been authorized to slash the prices on every one of them, in an effort to sell them all in just 4-days. In fact, some will be sold for just $99 per month and still have the balance of their factory warranties remaining." Buyers can expect to witness vehicle prices slashed by $5,000 to $15,000 depending on the vehicle's year, make & model.

McGee also points out that prices will be slashed "as low as or lower than wholesale auction prices in most cases. The problem with auction-pricing is that bidding often leads to inflated prices, thereby eliminating substantial savings versus this type of event, where every vehicle is discounted to the bare minimum." Response is expected to be huge, therefore customers are encouraged to act fast to ensure that they have the best selection to choose from.

All sales must be handled on a first-come, first-served basis. Bidding is prohibited, offering the perfect opportunity for customers to purchase a pre-owned vehicle at the lowest possible price, including several vehicles that will be priced as low as $2995! There will be an enormous selection of vehicles available, including: Toyotas, Hondas, Kias, Chevrolets, Fords, Dodges, Chryslers, Jeeps, Nissans and more.

"We are overstocked with pre-owned vehicles that must be liquidated by month's-end," says McGee. "The firm we have hired claims they can sell them all in just 4-days which, if that occurs, would be an amazing accomplishment. I'm willing to try anything to eliminate these vehicles from my books!"

All vehicles will be on display at McGee Pre-Owned Superstore, located on Route 139 starting Thursday, August 21st.

Buick Rendezvous for as low as $99* a month!

McGee Pre-Owned Superstore will do whatever it takes to get people into the car of their dreams even if some have had serious credit problems in the past. Special Finance & Second-Chance credit specialists will be on-site to arrange financing on the spot. "Most of all, McGee's Pre-Owned Superstore in Pembroke will be stocked with over 5 million dollars worth of pre-owned vehicles — that's over 200 cars, trucks, vans, and sport utility vehicles to choose from. It couldn't get any better for the serious buyer."

Toyotas with great fuel economy for as low as $99* a month!

McGee reminds prospective buyers to act quickly if they want to take advantage of these incredible savings. "I can't stress enough that this $99 per month vehicle sale is for 4-days only. Once our inventory is reduced, all prices will return to full retail and it's back to business as usual. It's also first-come, first-served, so it's critical to come early to have the best chance of getting the vehicle you want."

Those wishing to beat the rush can visit McGee Pre-Owned Superstore on Route 139 in Pembroke beginning today to search for the vehicle that fits their lifestyle and budget. For further information regarding this event call:

Students monitor Little Harbor

The group is looking at two distinct areas of Little Harbor — a spot across the street from the Sandy Beach parking lot (the "reference site") and at the junction of Jerusalem and Nichols Road, near Cat Dam (the "study site"). The data collected at the reference site is used as a comparison to study site, which is of primary importance. Besides monitoring the health of inner and proper Little Harbor, the CSCR data will produce baseline data to then compare to the post-Little Harbor sewer project.

On Tuesday morning, at about 9:30a.m., the group gathered their materials — clipboards, waterproof boots, quadrates (one-meter squared PVC piping) — and headed out into the field. Today, they are focusing on vegetation.

For three days a week, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday mornings, the students transform from typical teenagers to respected water scientists.

A Cohasset resident, Chase was looking for a job to complement her studies and be close to home and CSCR was the perfect combination.

"I wanted something where I could get out in the field," said Chase, adding practical work experience in the field is something graduate programs look for in candidates.

Colleen Ryan studies the content of plant life within a quadrate on inner Little Harbor while Kerry McCabe records the information.

All the students on this project are doing their first CSCR summer project and most are entering their freshman year of high school. For three days a week, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday mornings, the students transform from typical teenagers to respected water scientists.

The first stop is the saltmarsh across from Sandy Beach. With their quadrates and clipboards in hand, the group splits into three groups to tackle four different sectors of the marsh. The students lay down the quadrate to one-meter squared area to analyze. Using a corresponding grid, they determine the percentage of each type of vegetation.

"We want to determine what species are growing and how much there is," said Julia Canney, an incoming freshman at Cohasset High.

The students are able to identify much of the vegetation by its Latin name with genus and species as well as its more common name. Chase steps in if they are not sure what type of vegetation they are looking at.

On other days during their eight-week project, they have set out traps and nets for fish and other marine life or gathered samples from the saltmarsh mudflats to determine the salinity of the water. One of the most interesting finds of the summer according to the students was encountering two different species typically found in the Gulf of Mexico. They conjecture a tropical storm or hurricane sent the fish way off course.

After they finish gathering data at the reference site, they head over to the inner Little Harbor site to do a similar survey.

Their preliminary findings show some striking differences between the two sites.

"We've noticed the water is a lot clearer and cleaner at the reference site. At the study site there is quick sand mud," said Morgan McCarthy, an incoming freshman at Cohasset High. There is more diversity of plant life and marine life at the reference site, but more quantity of fish at the study site. The reference site's location near Cunningham Bridge allow for more daily flushing than the site near Nichols Road, they say.

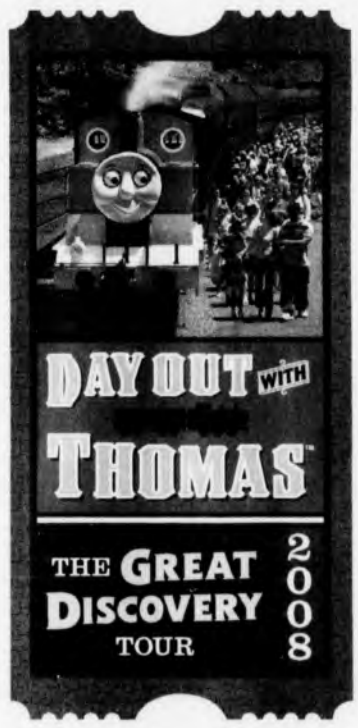
Each student keeps a journal to track their daily findings and comment on their personal experience interacting with science.

The Little Harbor CSCR project data will provide baseline data of the health of the inner Little Harbor before the sewer lines go in. Chase said the study site's location is in an area along Nichols Road where town sewer is being implemented. In addition, the study site is located close to Cat Dam, a town-owned tide gate, which is currently under Conservation Commission scrutiny to determine the appropriate operational schedule.

"Hopefully the data will help the town make a good decision," said Chase.

For Chase, the kids have been engaged and enthusiastic on the project.

"At times we can get started talking about stuff and they begin to ask why and hypothesize their own answers," said Chase. "They have really been active participants."



Olivia Adkins puts a quadrate in place on the dunes across from Sandy Beach. Cohasset students are studying plant life for a wetland restoration project for credit toward their high school diploma.

Students, Prescott Coughlin, Matt Swanborg & Jim McKelvey work ogether in their area of study on the dunes across from Sandy Beach.

Wetland Restoration Project Director, Jaci Chase, and student Morgan McCarthy study the different plant life within a sample of the dunes on inner Little Harbor.

CHS fall sport schedule

Fall Preseason Sports Information Night, CHS Gym Lobby on Monday, Aug. 27 at 6:45 p.m. We ask that students bring their $250 user fee and at least one parent/guardian to the meeting. There are a number of changes in our athletic policies that will be presented. Parents and students will then have an opportunity to meet with the coaching staff to discuss team rules and expectations for the Fall 2008 season.

Health Precautions

Student athletes and parents are reminded to take proper health precautions for the first week of practice. Student-athletes should come to practice properly nourished and hydrated. Water will be provided at practice, students–athletes should bring there own water bottles with their names clearly marked on them to avoid sharing water bottles.

Mosquito repellant will be made available at all practices and games. Student-athletes, coaches, and fans will be encouraged to take the proper precautions to use bug spray and remain safe at all CHS athletic events.

Students and parents are reminded that there are still risks associated with mosquito borne illnesses such as West Nile Virus. Parents are urged to use caution and follow the Preventing Diseases Spread by Mosquitos Fact Sheet that will be available at all Cohasset Public Schools and at the Massachusetts Department of Public Heath Web site: www.mass.gov/dph.

Deb Bostwick is not an easy act to follow.

19 years at the helm of any athletic program is a rarity these days. Bostwick's longevity as head coach of the Cohasset High field hockey team was a testament to not only her passion for the post, but also to her success as both a mentor and winning coach.

"Deb definitely leaves some big shoes to fill," said longtime Athletic Director Ron Ford, who came aboard at Cohasset High a year behind Bostwick, "but we think we've found someone who knows Deb's system pretty well, and can make a pretty smooth transition into that position."

Indeed. Abby Coakley has had the unique opportunity to observe Bostwick about as closely as one can over the last decade. Coakley is recognized to this day as one of the best players ever produced by the CHS field hockey program, having played for the varsity squad all four years before graduating in 2002, and she has been an assistant coach under Bostwick the last three years, serving her first year as the Junior Varsity head coach, the last two as the assistant varsity coach.

"I was pretty excited to see Abby apply for the job," said Ford. "We had a few other applicants for the job, but Abby brings so much to the table. We expect she's going to do a great job. The kids who've played for her seem very excited and supportive over her selection, and so do the parents."

There's certainly no denying the sense of excitement surrounding the program these days. 48 girls have signed up to give field hockey a try this fall, including 15 freshmen. Both are all time highs for a program that has enjoyed a great deal of success under Bostwick. Bear in mind Cohasset High has a student body of fewer than 400, and field hockey competes with soccer, cheerleading and other fall activities for participants.

"I was absolutely thrilled when I saw those numbers," said Coakley, who was one of just 18 girls in the program as a CHS freshman in 1998. "There does

Cohasset swim team takes title

Championship comes home for first time since 2004

The Cohasset swim team won the South Shore Swim League championship at the Kingsbury Club in Kingston, Saturday, August 9.

"I'm so proud of everyone on the team," co-coach Casey Anderson said. "We had an awesome season and finally getting the trophy back is just the way we wanted it to end. As my last year as head coach, I couldn't have asked for a better season with both the swimmers and the parents helping out and giving it their all. I know that Meredith [Nelson] and I really had a great summer."

The meet started out with the 8 and under and 10 and under swimmers. The 8U boys came in second in the Medley Relay (Will Greer, Sean McElhinney, Will Thomas, and Nicholas Simone). The 10U followed and had a great win in their Medley Relay (Alex Norton, Jack Donahue, Chris Norton, and AJ Kucinski) followed by the girls who came in a close second to MASK (Paige Carrabes, Callahan O'Neill, Sophie Wolfe, and Morgen Montgomery).

The12U boys set a record in their Medley Relay with a time of 1:01.75, congrats to Connor Green, Ian Kennedy, Sam Rice, and Cole Kissick.

Outstanding individual races included; Will Greer, 8U boys, had a strong first place finish in the 25 free. Alex and Chris Norton who are 10U. Alex swam 50 free, 25 fly, and 25 back and got first place in all three. Chris had a first place finish in the 25 free.

Julia Klier and Callahan O'Neill who are a 10U went one, two in the 50 free, and placed in their other individual races, they were a "dynamic duo for our 10 and under girls," added co-coach Meredith Nelson.

Morgen Montgomery, 10U girls, helped the team with a first in the 25 free and 25 fly.

Coaching vacancies

Cohasset High School is looking for a junior varsity boys soccer coach as well as an athletic trainer.

Coach comes full circle

seem to be a lot of excitement. Of course, Deb and last year's success have a lot to do with that."

The 2007 squad finished with a record of 18-2-1, placed second in a very competitive South Shore League and reached the quarterfinals of the state tourney before losing to SSL rival Harwich.

Coakley is looking to stick largely to the system that brought the program to so much success under Bostwick, but she does have a few tweaks in mind that she hopes will help carry the Lady Skippers to the next level.

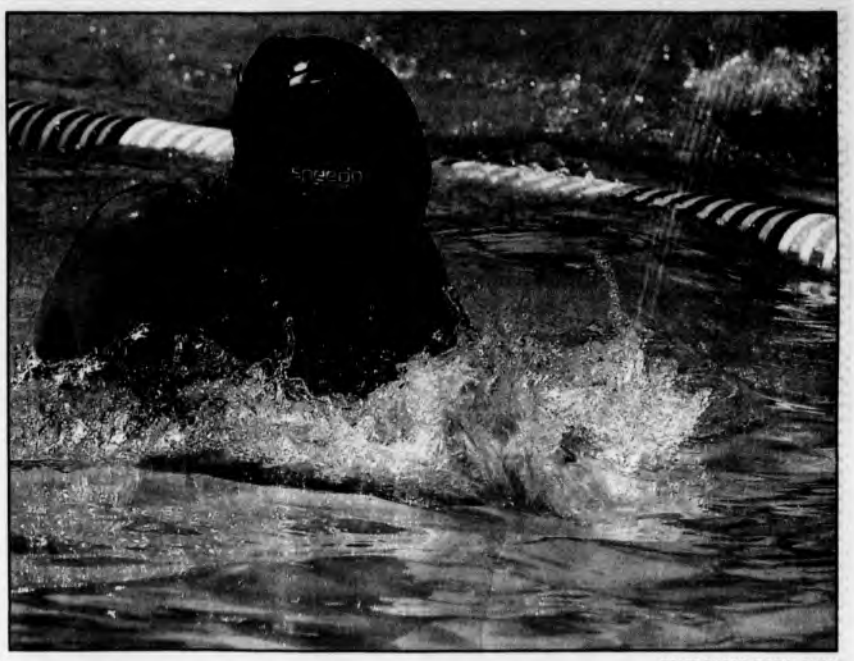
"I'm definitely taking over a great program from Deb," said Coakley, "but the sport is always changing, so we have to evolve too."

Considering Coakley finished among the state's top 20 scorers in her senior year at CHS, earning her a spot on the 2002 Mariner All-Scholastic team, it should comes as no surprise that those "tweaks" have to do with a bit more aggressiveness on the offensive end.

"I'm looking to make us a little more offensive-minded and hopefully get us a little more postseason success," said Coakley, who still lives with her family in Cohasset.

Coakley played field hockey her freshman year at Lasalle College in Newton. However, her academic pursuits in the areas of Art History and studio art led to a transfer in her sophomore year to the School of the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston, where competitive field hockey was not an option Still, she continued to play the sport at the intramural level.

Abby will take the last few classes she needs this fall at UMass-Boston to graduate with a BA in Art Studies. The schedule she's arranged will not interfere with her coaching requirements, and this winter she figures to begin in earnest her search for full time employment. She plans to apply to a few art museums, but a career in teaching also remains a possibility.



"I'd love to teach, but I'm going to be looking at a few things," Coakley said.

As for her inaugural CHS field hockey team, Coakley sees lots of potential, with several promising newcomers joining a good portion of the core that led the Lady Skippers to last year's 18-2-1 record.

"I know that a bunch of the girls who are coming out went to camps over the summer, and they've gotten to know each other," reported the rookie head coach. "It's good because a lot of these girls already know each other from playing basketball and lacrosse together, so our team chemistry should be pretty strong to start. Now it's just a matter of putting that all together."

The Athletic Director sounds confident in Coakley's ability to do just that.

"Abby was one of the best captains I've seen around here in my time as A.D," reported Ford. "She was a great role model and leader. She's someone I see carrying on a lot of the good things in the tradition of Deb, but also bringing a few of her own very positive things to the table. We're very excited to have her on board."

Connor Green, 12U boys, set records in two of his individual races. He won everything he swam.

Sam Rice dominated at the meet, setting a record in the 25 fly. Emily Zimmerman, 12U girls, took home a first in the 100 IM and helped the 12 and under girls Medley Relay score points for the team.

Hope Kissick, 14U girls, dominated in the 50 breast and 100 IM. Ryan McGovern, 14U boys, placed first in his 50 back. Chris Murphy, 14U boys, placed high in his age group and stepped up to the older boys relay to help them with some high places.

Caitlin Mahoney, Jake Kissick, and Sean Crowley, 17U, all had great swims finishing top three in their races.

"These are just a few swimmers out of the many we had swimming on Saturday," Nelson said. "Everyone contributed to our successful day at championships and I could not be more proud of the team for their outstanding swimming and dedication this summer. We've worked so hard to win back the trophy and it definitely paid off. It was a great way to end my career as head coach of the team. Congratulations Cohasset Swim Team, we did it!"

Pet food drive to help fight hunger in local pets

The Old Derby Animal Hospital in conjunction with Maggie's Dog House and The South Shore Pet Network are holding a pet food drive. Between now and the end of August, you can drop off any type of pet food or kitty litter to the collections box at Old Derby Animal Hospital or Maggie's Dog House. These items will then be donated to the Second Parish Church Food Pantry in Hingham to be distributed to South Shore families.

This initiative is in response to the evolving problems of foreclosures and people's financial struggles during the economic recession. Many people are being forced to surrender their beloved pets as they struggled to stretch their budgets, food stamps and/or Social Security income to meet the escalating cost of living. Many local food pantries are trying to restore hope by offering free pet food to help owners keep their animals out of shelters.

If you would like to get involved, you can make donations by dropping food at one of the two convenient locations in Hingham. Old Derby Animal Hospital is located on 40 recreation Park Drive, near the Pilgrim Skating Rink and Maggie's Dog is located downtown Hingham on 17 Main St., near Nona's Ice Cream.

GetAWAY

Atlantic City gets a makeover

Mark Chapman
GATEHOUSE NEWS SERVICE

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. -I'm sitting beneath the palms, sipping a frozen mudslide, as cocktail waitresses clad in Caribbean-blue bikinis stroll from table to table, chaise to chaise. Some vacationers lounge languidly by a crystal-clear pool, snoozing, reading, sipping. Others take refuge in private poolside cabanas equipped with flat-screen TVs, sofas and bar setups. Reggae music plays in the background.

Believe it or not, I am in Atlantic City. The new Atlantic City.

Once known for diving horses, an aging Frank Sinatra and, later, political corruption and rats, Atlantic City is coming of age as a place of luxury and class.

Don't think of it as just a Vegas wannabe. With the opening of The Pool and The Waterfront Tower, both at Harrah's Resort Atlantic City, this is a place where you can have a fine getaway and enjoy some gaming, too.

At 44 stories, the brand-new Harrah's tower is the tallest building in Atlantic City and second tallest in New Jersey. The 900-plus guestrooms are all suite-sized and offer bay, ocean or city views (mine had a vista of Absecon marshland and windmills).

The Pool is the city's largest indoor pool complex and housed in a 172,000-square-foot, 90-foot-high glass dome. We're talking an Olympic-sized pool, six whirlpools, 12 cabanas, indoor and outdoor decks and The Pool Bar, surrounded by $1 million worth of horticulture.

While by day The Pool is everything a tropical vacation should be - minus the sunscreen since you're indoors - by night it morphs into a throbbing, pulsing nightclub. The well-dressed and well-heeled can talk, drink and dance the night away in a sophisticated atmosphere befitting the best trendy retreats. On any given night, you might find yourself brushing elbows with celebrities (on my visit members of the New York Giants) en route to their private cabanas as the crowds build 'round midnight.

The adjacent Elizabeth Arden Red Door Spa has 23 treatment rooms with a full menu of signature services and beauty treatments along with several exclusive spa packages.

Harrah's is by no means the only Atlantic City resort taking the express elevator to luxury land. Also in the Marina District, The Borgota just launched The Water Club, a $400 million, 800-room non-gaming, boutique lifestyle hotel that includes a two-story spa.

OK, so the city by the sea still has Mr. Peanut - and Donald Trump, with his properties including Trump Taj Mahal (opening a new 39-story Chairman's Tower this fall) and the aging Trump Plaza on the Boardwalk. But a decades-long push to clean up the neighborhoods and expand the visitor-friendly zone past the Boardwalk - that sprawling wooden walkway overlooking miles of sand and surf - have succeeded.

Today, drive into town on the Atlantic City Expressway or arrive by train and you are greeted by a park, statues, good lighting and The Walk, a collection of outlet shops and chain eateries which have replaced the previous run-down storefronts and bars.

Caesar's is one of the most famous names in casinos and has long been Atlantic City's centerpiece. Expansion and upgrading has taken place at Caesar's too, the property growing to more than 1,100 rooms in four towers; the complex also includes The Pier Shops, with designer stores and fine-dining restaurants.

In addition to its central location, Caesar's has great ambiance. The decor is based on ancient Rome, and various employees strut around in Roman Empire attire. The Temple Lobby, with a soaring four-story atrium, is an escalator ride from the street-level entrance and resembles the Forum in ancient Rome - if the real Forum had a concierge desk, bellhops and ATMs.

Confidence in Atlantic City's new image is high. In July, the first non-casino Boardwalk resort in almost half a century opened its doors. The Chelsea is a throwback to Atlantic City's heyday as a summer vacation destination for the well-heeled set. There are poolside cabanas and a saltwater-inspired spa, and the new resort is the only hotel in town to offer full beach service - fluffy towels, lounge chairs, umbrellas, food and beverages, exclusively for hotel guests.

It's yet another example of the new Atlantic City chic.

Tropical comes to Atlantic City at The Pool at Harrah's.

Once known for diving horses, an aging Frank Sinatra and, later, political corruption and rats, Atlantic City is coming of age as a place of luxury and class.

Rich dining

Nowhere is the upgrading of Atlantic City more evident than in the dining scene. At The Steakhouse at Harrah's, the $40 to $50 entrees may be pricey, but those steaks are worth every nickel. And don't miss the lobster macaroni and cheese and the tender, succulent shrimp the size of a small dog.

For those with a Mediterranean Jones, Mia by Georges Perrier and Chris Scarduzio is a high-ceilinged venue at Caesar's specializing in contemporary bistro cuisine.

At The Borgota, gourmands will enjoy Wolfgang Puck American Grille; SeaBlue, with fresh fish from around the world cooked on a wood-burning grill; and a pair of steakhouses, Bobby Flay Steak and Old Homestead.

The service, called ACES, was originally expected to start this summer, then by fall. Now it is said to be on track for a late 2008 or early 2009 debut.

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) Impatience with those who don't keep up with you can cause resistance, which, in turn, can lead to more delays. Best to be helpful and supportive if you want results.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) A surprise announcement from a colleague could put you on the defensive. Gather your facts and respond. You'll soon find the situation shifting in your favor.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) Time spent away from a project pays off with a new awareness of options you hadn't considered before. Weigh them carefully before deciding which to choose.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) Consider confronting that personal conflict while there's still time to work things out. A delay can cause more problems. A longtime colleague might offer to mediate.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) Some emerging matters could impede the Lion's progress in completing an important project. Best advice: Deal with them now, before they can create costly delays.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) Your aspect continues to favor an expanding vista. This could be a good time to make a career move, and taking an out-of-town job could be a good way to do it.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) Disruptive family disputes need to be settled so that everyone can move on. Avoid assuming this burden alone, though. Ask for — no, demand — help with this problem.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) Patience is called for as you await word on an important workplace situation. A personal circumstance, however, could benefit by your taking immediate action.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) Don't lose confidence in yourself. Those doubters are likely to back off if you demand they show solid proof why they think your ideas won't work.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) A temporary setback might cause the usually surefooted Goat some unsettling moments. But keep going. The path ahead gets easier as you move forward.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) There's welcome news from the workplace. There also could be good news involving a relationship that has long held a special meaning for you.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) You might still need to cut some lingering ties to a situation that no longer has the appeal it once held. In the meantime, you can start to explore other opportunities.

Fun By The Numbers

Like puzzles? Then you'll love sudoku. This mind-bending puzzle will have you hooked from the moment you square off, so sharpen your pencil and put your sudoku savvy to the test!

Here's How It Works:

Sudoku puzzles are formatted as a 9x9 grid, broken down into nine 3x3 boxes. To solve a sudoku, the numbers 1 through 9 must fill each row, column and box. Each number can appear only once in each row, column and box. You can figure out the order in which the numbers will appear by using the numeric clues already provided in the boxes. The more numbers you name, the easier it gets to solve the puzzle!

Johnny Souza Quartet performs free concert

Johnny Souza

"Under the August Moon with the Johnny Souza Quartet" presents local jazzman Souza and his group performing tunes from the "Great American Songbook." Last year Souza packed the Otto Fehlow room in his first Dr. Richard M. Shiff Forums presents appearance. Now he's back and ready to deliver another round of music and monologue as he takes his audience back in time to the great years of song.

This free performance will take place at 7 p.m. Monday, Aug. 25, in the Plymouth Public Library's Otto Fehlow Meeting Room. You will hear selections from George & Ira Gershwin, Cole Porter, Richard Rodgers, Oscar Hammerstein, Duke Ellington, and Henry Mancini.

Trumpeter/singer/composer Souza is an alumnus of Berklee College of Music and has led his own dance band performing at nightclubs and concerts up and down the eastern seaboard. He now performs a classic, standard repertoire similar to the styles of Frank Sinatra, Bobby Darrin, Harry Connick Jr. and Louis Armstrong. You can catch his monthly jazz column in the Old Colony Memorial on the last Saturday of the month. Check out his Web site at www.johnnysouza.com.

Pianist Paul Schmeling is the Chair Emeritus of Berklee College of Music's Piano department. He has been inspiring countless students since 1961 in interpretation, improvisation and arrangement on the piano. He has performed with jazz greats such as Clark Terry, George Coleman, Carol Sloane; the list goes on and on. Check out his award winning Berklee online course: "Berklee Keyboard Method."

Bassist Marshall Wood, also a Berklee alumnus, is one of the most sought after bassists in the New England area. His reputation as a swinging and sensitive musician landed him recording with Anita O'Day, Monty Alexander and Tommy Flanigan, as well as touring with Tony Bennett.

Drummer Steve Silverstein has been playing professionally since the age of 13 after studying with Keith Copeland at Berklee. He has played with ensembles led by Max Roach and Archie Shepp, as well as performing with the Lincoln Center Jazz Orchestra and at the New Orleans Jazz and Heritage Festival.

The Dr. Richard M. Shiff Forums presents: is sponsored by the Plymouth Public Library Corporation and no registration is required. It's cool to go back to school

Doors open Tuesday

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

For some it has come all to fast. For others it couldn't come fast enough. But, come Tuesday, there will be no way around it — it is back to school. Ready and waiting on the morning of Sept. 2, will be the teachers, administrators and staff, many of which have been hard at work this summer preparing for the students' return.

Classrooms have been decorated, curriculums updated, floors cleaned, and school lunch menus revamped. When the buses empty and the school doors swing open Tuesday morning, Osgood, Deer Hill and the Middle-High School will officially being the 2008-2009 school year.

"The first day of school is always exciting. No matter how many years you are in this business, you're starting over on the first day of school," said Superintendent of Schools Denise Walsh. "It's an opportunity to look at what you did last year and what you can do better for this year."

One of the focuses of the new school year Walsh is impressing upon the teachers and staff at all three schools is giving kids "a global education."

"We want to do the best we ensure we are preparing them for their future," said Walsh. "It's a different world now than when most of us grew up."

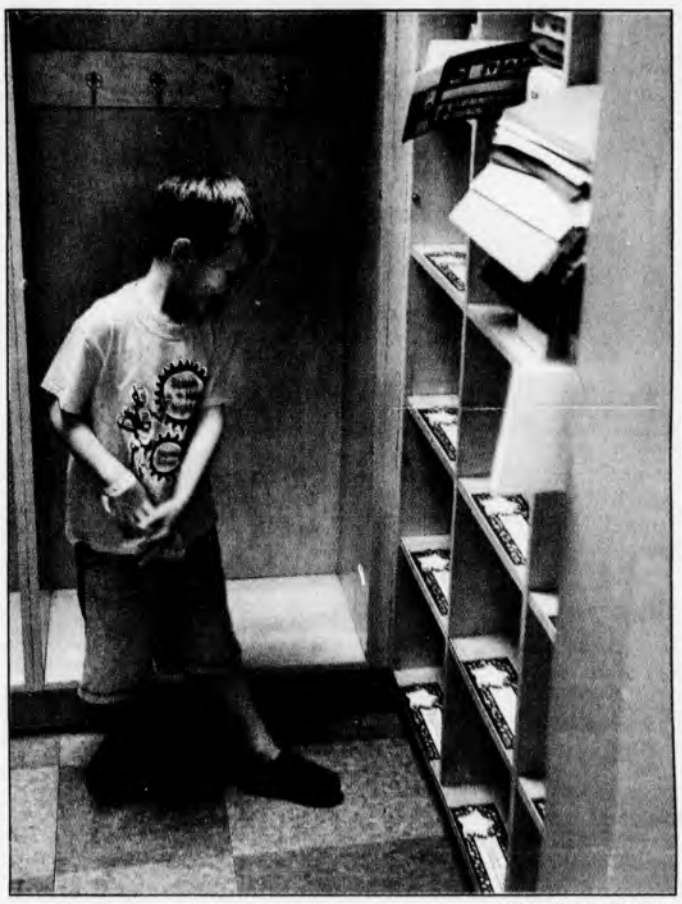
There is lots of new technology to facilitate a global education, including a technology/engineering lab at the Middle School and a Science, Technology, Engineering, and Mathematics ("STEM") Lab at Deer Hill.

"It's quite an opportunity to have those resources available for hands-on science," said Walsh.

There are lots of new faces and new activities for the upcoming school year at each of the three school buildings.

"We are in good shape. We are ready and we are excited," said Walsh.

Osgood School



This year, the Osgood School will celebrate its 10th birthday and Principal Janet Sheehan says the school has a lot to celebrate.

"A beautiful facility, a new computer lab, updated instructional materials including new technology, and an exemplary faculty and staff," said Sheehan. The Osgood administrators, teachers and staff have been preparing to welcome Cohasset's youngest students from pre-kindergarten to second grade come Tuesday.

"We understand that the children are excited, but they and their parents are also nervous," said Sheehan. Accordingly, as much of the staff as possible will be there to greet students with friendly, smiling faces as they arrive during the first week of school as they get off the bus or are dropped off by parents. School will start at 9:10a.m. and finish at 3:10p.m.; half day kindergarten will end at 11:50a.m.

"Everyone is available to guide the children to find their teachers and to

Armstrong debuts children's classes at Our World

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Since he was 10 years old, Jim Armstrong has been making music. With humble beginnings playing "Down in the Valley" on a ukulele, Armstrong has come full circle in his musical career — teaching young, aspiring musical talent in Cohasset and the South Shore.

While he still is a musician in his own right, regularly taking the stage in his own band, The Armstrong Brothers, now, he often plays back up to his talented students.

"If they want to be the one wailing on a guitar at a rock concert or the next Hannah Montana, if they can dream, they can do it...as long as they have a teacher like me," Armstrong says, half-kiddingly.

With a passionate nature and indefatigable spirit, Armstrong has taught scores of local kids and teenagers how to play the guitar or ukulele or mandolin — and sing, to boot.

Armstrong sort of fell into the world of guitar instruction five years ago after a persistent father of three young girls with musical talent. Mitch Brown, a former Cohasset resident, asked Armstrong on several occasions if he would hone his girls' skills. He agreed and things took off from there.

"It's been a lot of fun ever since," says Armstrong. Shortly after taking

School board explains military misconception

By Nancy White and Mary Ford
NWHITE@CNC.COM

To coin an oft-used phrase: there are always two sides to a story.

And while those on opposing sides may disagree on the issue — Cohasset Middle High School allows both military recruiters and counter-recruiters to set up a table outside the cafeteria from time to time during the school year. But the two groups are not at the school at the same time so there is no interaction between the groups, the School Committee said this week.

"The implication put forth on the radio never happened."
— Rick Flynn, School Committee

The issue came to the forefront last week when Cohasset High School was mentioned during a radio talk show discussing whether anti-war activists belonged at a high school career day. The subject on "The Natural Truth," a talk show hosted by Michael Graham, angered some residents. The Mariner received several calls urging the paper to look into the issue. School Committee Chairman Rick Flynn also got calls.

The talk show topic seemed to stem from a Boston Globe article two

Wind turbines

Planning Board to hold public hearing Sept. 8

On Monday, Sept. 8, the Planning Board will have its first public hearing on a proposed development of two wind turbines on the Graham Waste site off Route 3A. This is the first wind turbine project under the new wind energy conversion bylaw passed at the 2008 Annual Town Meeting in the spring.

The private project on the Graham Waste Services site is a joint venture between CCI-Energy, Palmer Capital, Lumus Construction and Emergent Energy. Graham Waste business and landowner, Paul Barry, has leased the land to the developers.

The application proposes twin turbines with towers 100 meters high and blades 41-meters long, making the entire structure extend 141 meters into the sky. The turbines are structurally larger than the 60-meter Hull Wind II located on their capped landfill on the Weir River, but Hull Wind II's siting gives it additional height. The turbines will be set about 500 feet apart, on either side of the capped landfill.

The turbines hold the possibility of providing as much as (or more than) two-thirds of the town's energy, Jim Sweeney of CCI-Energy has said. Although negotiation would still need to be worked out, CCI-Energy is interested in selling the excess energy to the town at a discounted rate to be utilized in town buildings. CCI-Energy has been working with the Alternative Energy Committee.

As the large turbines will change the landscape —and skyscape — of Cohasset, it is expected there will be many questions and concerns along with the project. The developers have said they have designed the project to conform with the town's wind energy conversion bylaw.

Any person wishing to be heard on the application should appear at the hearing to share their concerns or ask questions.

POLICE BEAT

'Drunk kids' report leads to finding fugitive

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Three young adults, a 17-year-old Cohasset girl, a 20-year-old Rockland man, and a 23-year-old Weymouth man, were taken into protective custody at 12:40 a.m. on Wednesday (Aug. 20) as they were walking on South Main Street. Police had received a complaint about a group of "loud, drunk kids on the sidewalk" in the 200 block of South Main. The officer who responded found three people who were intoxicated.

Further investigation revealed that the 20-year-old, Daland J. Fithian, of 275 Market St., Rockland, was wanted on a felony warrant out of New York for burglary. Cohasset police notified the NYPD, who requested Cohasset hold Fithian so they could extradite him to New York City.

The 17-year-old Cohasset teen was released to the custody of her mother after the teen was checked out by paramedics due to her high level of intoxication and for a cut on her foot, police said.

The 23-year-old Weymouth man was so intoxicated that he urinated in the cell. Police made him scrub the cell or face arrest. He was held until 10 a.m. the following morning.

Fithian is being held in the Dedham House of Correction on a fugitive from justice warrant, which is the mechanism police use to hold someone who is wanted from out of state. Fithian could be held up to 60 days in Massachusetts on the warrant.

Stolen ladder

A contractor at a new home on Heritage Lane, a new development off Beechwood Street by the railroad tracks, reported that his 40-foot aluminum ladder had been stolen sometime over the weekend (Aug. 16-17). The contractor, a 35-year-old Stoughton man, drove to the police station at 9:56 a.m. Monday (Aug. 18) after going to the site and seeing that the ladder, valued at $500, was missing. Police put extra patrols in the area.

MV not stolen

A 21-year-old Scituate woman, who was attending a party at a friend's house on Border Street after she got off work at a local restaurant, reported that her car, a 2000 green Toyota Camry, had been stolen. She reported it missing at about 3:30 a.m. Tuesday (Aug. 19). The woman told police that she had left the keys in the car and had parked it in the driveway. She said she left the party for a while with someone else and when she returned, she could not find her car. Police entered the car's information into the computer so if a police department anywhere in the country checked the registration, the car would come up as stolen. Police also notified area towns.

At about 4:30 a.m., the investigating officer drove by the Border Street address and saw the car parked in the driveway.

Apparently someone at the party had moved the car, which had been blocking other cars in the driveway, to another spot.

The stolen car report was cancelled.

MV crashes

• A 37-year-old Colorado man was cited following an accident at Chief Justice Cushing Highway (3A) and Beechwood Street last week. Police said a 21-year-old Scituate man was operating a 1986 Ford pickup that was pulling a weed chipper northbound on 3A and was making a left onto Beechwood when the VW Passat, driven by the Colorado man, hit the chipper.

Police said the Colorado man, who was heading south straight through the intersection, did not realize the pickup was pulling a trailer. The pickup was well into the turn when the mishap occurred.

There were no reported injuries. The VW had to be towed and the Colorado man was cited for failure to grant the right of way. The accident occurred at 8:23 a.m. Tuesday (Aug. 19).

• A 59-year-old Cohasset man driving a 1999 Audi east on Sohier Street had stopped to make a left into his driveway when his car was rear-ended by a 2001 Jeep, driven by a 39-year-old Scituate woman. The Jeep was towed to be checked out, per order of the fire department, because the airbag failed to deploy, police said. If an airbag does not deploy in an accident it could deploy later, at random, while the operator is driving the vehicle.

Marijuana arrests

An officer stopped a 1991 Honda Accord on North Main Street by the Little League fields for having a taillight out at 10:15 p.m. Tuesday (Aug. 19). The officer approached the Honda and could smell burning marijuana. All three occupants were ordered out of the car. Police searched the car and found a quantity of marijuana.

The driver, a 20-year-old Scituate man, and his two passengers, two 19-year-old men, also from Scituate, were arrested for possession of Class D (marijuana). The driver was also cited for defective equipment (taillight).

Trailer truck

The driver of a 40-foot delivery truck notified police at about 2 p.m. Wednesday (Aug. 20) after the resident asked him to park on the street. The driver did not think it was safe. Police said the resident and driver had to make other arrangements because the Border Street location was not safe and would block traffic. Lt. William Quigley said in many cases, delivery trucks and moving vans have to transfer their cargo into smaller vehicles.

Stolen wallet

A 16-year-old Scituate boy had his wallet stolen out of the 2008 Toyota RAV that he and his mother had driven to Tedeschi Plaza last Wednesday (Aug. 20) at about 1 p.m.

They left the vehicle unlocked and went into separate stores. When they returned, the wallet, which contained the boy's learner's permit, was gone. The mother reported the incident the following day (Aug. 20).

Lt. Quigley said it is important for victims of a theft to report crimes as soon as they realize it has occurred so police can investigate right away.

Nap

A 44-year-old Shaw's employee on break was taking a nap in a 1994 Honda Prelude when a concerned caller contacted police about a man lying on the front seat of a car. Police checked out the man, who explained he was grabbing a nap in the shade while on a break from work. The car was parked by the Beechwood Cemetery. Police contacted Shaw's management and his story checked out. The incident was reported at about 2 p.m. Thursday (Aug. 21).

Wrong car

A concerned caller contacted police about a man wearing a pink visor, in front of Walgreen's, who was walking around sticking his arms in cars.

As it turned out, a friend of the 44-year-old Scituate man, who had been drinking, had stopped in the fire lane to drop him off so he could pick up a few items. The friend then moved to another spot.

The man in the visor thought he was getting into his friend's car, but it was a different car that had moved into the fire lane. That operator called police.

Police found the man inside the supermarket and sorted the matter out. The incident occurred at 7:15 p.m. Thursday (Aug. 21).

Stolen checks

A local bank notified a 78-year-old Cohasset woman that someone had tried to cash a $250 check, but the signature did not match hers and the person was denied service.

The woman called police and was asked if anyone had had access to her checks. She reported employing a painter at her home. Police have his description and detectives are investigating and are reviewing the video tape at the bank. She reported the incident at 10:16 a.m. Friday (Aug. 22).

Diamond switched

A 51-year-old Cohasset woman who had taken her 4-carat diamond ring to a local jeweler to be reset was informed by the jeweler that the diamond was a cubic zirconia.

The woman told police last week that the diamond might have been removed and replaced with a cubic zirconia sometime between April and August 2008. During that period she had spent some time traveling. Workers had been at her home while she was away. Detectives are following up. The diamond ring was valued at about $30,000.

When you let the water run while brushing your teeth, shaving or washing dishes, you're swallowing up our rivers. Rivers are the primary source of tap water and wasting it depletes our rivers and costs you money.

So please, turn off the water. You'll save over three gallons each time you brush your teeth. Your rivers are closer than you think – thanks for keeping them flowing.

Solicitation bylaw deemed a success

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

In years past, when daylight saving time came around each spring, the police would soon be inundated with complaints from residents about solicitors who were knocking on their doors at dinnertime and later.

However, the town's 2-year-old, door-to-door solicitation bylaw appears to have eliminated headaches for residents and police alike.

The bylaw that was approved by the Attorney General's Office requires that those selling magazines, for example, must first register with the police department.

"The bylaw has really curtailed the door-to-door solicitors," Lt. William Quigley said. "Towns surrounding us have been inquiring about our bylaw." Cohasset's bylaw was modeled on a similar one in Duxbury.

The solicitation by-law has been effective in limiting the number of solicitors who came to town with the intention of getting in and quickly getting out. It has also provided some comfort to residents that the people who are soliciting have background checks performed by the police department.

Quigley said four people have registered with the police to sell door-to-door in the past two years. The licenses are good for one year and are non-transferable. The four who registered are really two people, as both reregistered for the second year. They are selling coupon books for a local dry cleaning company.

This spring and summer there have been a few calls to police, who respond to the scene and educate the solicitors about the need to register. Few do, but they are told they are subject to loss of solicitation license and fines if they continue to violate the bylaw. They could also be arrested.

"Any willful violation of a town bylaw is an 'arrestable' offense," Quigley said.

Quigley described the bylaw as a "great success."

"We know who is in town and residents know they have been vetted by us," he said.

Quigley said a problem area is Hull Street, where the double-yellow line serves as the boundary between Hingham and Cohasset. Solicitors do not always realize they have crossed over into Cohasset.

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

HAPPY ANNIVERSARY

Hey Cohasset. How is everyone doing on this start of this Labor Day Weekend? Make sure to enjoy the great weather, have fun with your family and friends and get ready to kick off a super school year for the kids. I want to send out a special Happy 20th Anniversary wish to my husband, Bob on Sept. 3rd. It does not seem possible that we have been married for 20 years but it is true. Happy Anniversary!

BUS DRIVER

A great wish is also being sent out from Dama Dow, one our wonderful bus drivers here in town. She wants to welcome Sam Zappolo on board as a driver and also welcome everyone else back as they get ready to drive and care for the bus riding children in town next week. Also, welcome back to the teachers and employees of the schools as they are hard at work already getting everything set for a smooth transition back into school for all. Here's hoping for September weather that is mild and nice and remember to drive with care when you are out and about as the kiddos are walking to and from their respective schools. Now, on to the column.

CROQUET

Back by popular demand! Gems of Hope Annual Croquet Tournament will be held at the home of Peter and Leah Roy, "The Oaks", on Sunday Sept. 14. Your generous support in the past has helped the school to thrive for 12 years. All donations are sent directly to the school. Please join us, make some new friends and learn a new sport! Brunch is served at 12 noon with croquet following at 1 pm. All are welcome to join us at this fun and festive event and support a good cause in educating these children. Tickets are $100 per person and can be reserved by calling Cindy Kuppens at 781-383-6670 or e-mail us at gemsofhope@gmail.com. A $200 donation educates and feed a child for a year. Friends remember Paul 'PJ' Trendowicz

Organize PJT golf tournament to benefit ASP, other charities

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

"It was something he really cared about and put a lot of sweat equity into. ASP is a terrific opportunity for those of us who have a lot going for us to help out others in need."
— Tom Digan

It's been six years since Paul "PJ" Trendowicz lost his life in a swimming accident, but those who knew and loved him still remember his youthful exuberance, friendly personality, and leadership skills and his constant smile.

Last year, some of his friends came up with the idea of holding an annual golf tournament in his memory. The 2007 event raised $3,200 for the Cohasset Appalachia Service Project, through which Trendowicz had helped fix and paint houses and repair roofs for the poor with other Cohasset youth.

This year's event – the Second Annual PJT Memorial Golf Tournament held at Pembroke Country Club Aug. 9 — was an even greater success, raising nearly $7,000. There were about 80 participants. The bulk of the proceeds will be donated to the ASP.

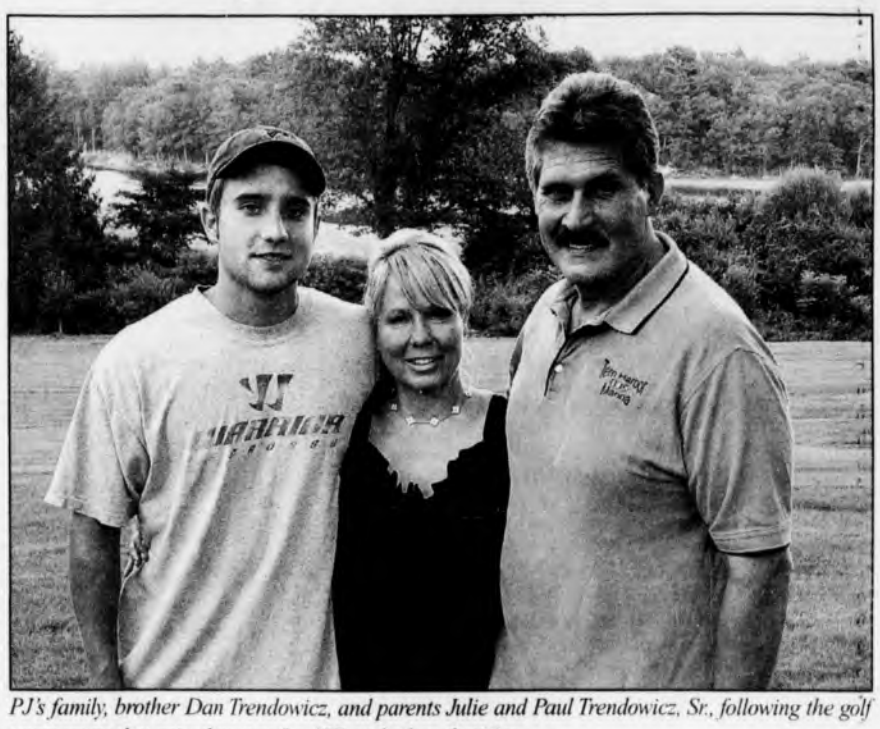
The remainder will benefit an as-yet-undetermined group or activity, such as an inner-city lacrosse clinic — "something that Paul would have liked — where the funds will really make an impact," said Brian Lewis, who chaired this year's tournament. "We are considering seven or eight different organizations. Because we raised more money this year, we are able to spread the funds around more."

Two other friends, Tom Digan and Alex Johnston, served as co-chairs. "We wanted to donate to something that Paul cared a lot about and to help out where there was a real need," said Digan, who also participated in the ASP with Trendowicz. "It was something he really cared about and put a lot of sweat equity into. ASP is a terrific opportunity for those of us who have a lot going for us to help out others in need."

Digan recalled his friend's ability to "relate to people from all walks of life. He could talk to anybody about anything," he said. "When his friends went off to college the year Paul passed away, we remembered the way he treated people and how he wasn't afraid to speak his mind. We all learned from that."

Trendowicz, who graduated from B.C. High in 2002, attended Cohasset Middle School after his family moved to town from New Jersey when he was in elementary school. He was captain of the B.C. High varsity lacrosse team and was active in the campus ministry program there. He also liked to play basketball.

Lewis and Digan helped create and organize the annual event to provide "an opportunity for his friends to get together to remember him and for his parents to see that his friends haven't forgotten him," Lewis said.



He attributes the even greater success of this year's tournament largely to word of mouth. "Everyone had such a good time that others also wanted to participate this year," Lewis said. "It's hard for friends to find time to get together once you get older, and this is a chance for us to do that."

Trendowicz still stands out in Lewis' memory. "He always brought people together, and this tournament shows that he can still do that even though he is gone," Lewis said. "He always included everyone. He had a great personality and a good heart. He was always looking out for everyone."

Various groups, including the B.C. High community, local businesses, and others donated funds or raffle items for the tournament.

A "Girls Spa Event" was held the same day for female friends of Trendowicz who didn't participate in the tournament. They were joined by his mother, Julie, and they all had a relaxing, enjoyable time together.

The tournament was followed by a cookout at Johnston's house, where friends and family members quietly celebrated Trendowicz's life.

on the Brown Sisters as students, he left his full-time job in computer sales and repair and became a full-time guitar instructor. He says each student's lesson is customized to play to the student's strengths and interest. "It is not the same dry, boring exercises."

In addition to offering his lessons, Armstrong provides the opportunity for his best and brightest students to get on stage and perform in front of an audience with The Armstrong Brothers at their occasional gigs.

"My students are the warm-up acts," says Armstrong who has annual gigs at the Arts Festival and Farmers' Market and other local venues and events.

While still continuing his afternoon and evening private lessons, this fall, he is introducing two group classes for younger kids — toddlers and five to eight year olds — at the Our World Global Discovery Museum.

"I'm trying to find a way to convince my wife I have a real job," he jokes. But, the new classes are a venture he is extremely excited about.

"I'm a big kid at heart. The kids will recognize right away I'm having as much as they are," says Armstrong. The toddler group is called "Musical Friends." The first session will be animal themed and is titled "Lions and tigers and bears…oh my!"

He offers a long list of activities he'll do with the toddler group — campfire sing a-long, costumes, themed songs, dancing and surprise parades. The toddler group class will be limited to 10 kids and their care provider. He'll play the favorite "old-time" songs of the moms and dads, "it's going to be as fun for the parents as it is for the kids."

He says his class differs from other toddler music classes in that he'll be playing a real live musical instrument in much of the activities. He'll bring his guitar, his ukulele and his mandolin along to show the kids.

At "Kids Rock!" for the five-to-eight-year-old set, they'll get the opportunity to transform from a rag-tag group of kids into a verifiable rock band. The kids, capped at 10 per session, will choose a band name, design a band banner/logo and learn to sing into a real microphone. Along the way, Armstrong says, they'll learn invaluable social skills in working together as a cohesive unit. At the end of the six-week program, they'll be a big show where the kids will perform a song of their choosing and an international song, to go along with the mission of Our World. After the show, just like real rock stars, the kids will be available to sign autographs for their adoring fans.

Making music

Armstrong says he has had the privilege to teach some of Cohasset's most talented young musicians. In the past year, he has put together some of that talent on a CD entitled "Full Circle." Each of the songs is written and performed by the students, with the Armstrong Brothers doing the background instrumentals.

"I was blown away that my students — on their own — were writing their own songs," says Armstrong. Through a special songwriting course, he helped them complete their song. The CD debuts this September.

"The end result is Cohasset's best and brightest original songs. It astonishes me how talented these kids are," says Armstrong.

His first students — the Brown Sisters (Abby, 14, Sarah, 13 and Audrey, 10) — he says are as talented as their father originally told him they were. Although they have relocated to Florida, Armstrong is still their guitar instructor and music producer via semi-annual visits and video conferencing. Recently, they released a six-song CD.

"They have a big future ahead of them," says Armstrong. So do many of his other students. Cohasset resident Mimi Mahoney played two one-hour sets at the Vermont State Fair this summer, with Armstrong as a background instrumentalist.

"I think she is talented enough to be signed by a major record label," says Armstrong.

On Cohasset Day, Saturday, Sept. 20 of which he is emceeing the entire festivities some of his students will be featured acts. The Cohasset Coffeehouse Music Hour, a 45-minute segment beginning at 3p.m. sponsored by French Memories, will include several of his "big stars." Fourteen-year-old Jenna Neer will be playing her guitar and singing; Anya Gruber will be doing the same. The Martell Brothers, Turner and Steven, along with their friend Brian Thomas (all under age eight) will be playing some 60s rock and roll to entertain the crown.

Later on in the day, the Armstrong Brothers Band themselves will take the stage from 7 to 8 p.m. Several of Armstrong's students will join the set.

Despite a practically non-stop schedule of lessons, gigs, classes, Armstrong revels what he does day in and day out.

"Music is the love of my life," says Armstrong.

To find out more about Armstrong's programs at Our World or his guitar instruction, call (781) 775-1039 or e-mail armstrongevents@yahoo.com.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Getting back in gear

While news never takes a hiatus — the quantity of news slows down somewhat over the summer months.

That should not be surprising given that town boards don't meet as often, schools are out, and lots of residents go away for a week or two. Other townspeople just like to kick back and relax and not think about "issues" or having to take the kids to dance lessons or hockey practice.

But with the start of school next week, that's all about to change.

The town budget season looms on the horizon, Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts meet, houses of worship resume their regular schedules, youth sports get into full swing along with myriad other activities for Cohasseters of all ages.

Here at the Cohasset Mariner, we're pleased to be the vehicle through which our readers either "get the word out" or "find out about" everything from who's on the dean's list to what is the latest news about plans to restore the old part of Town Hall or the future of the Teen "Garage."

But if you're on the delivery end of the news — in other words you want your club announcement or letter-to-the-editor in the paper — there are some simple "rules to follow."

We accept letters, news items and happenings by email, which is one of the most efficient ways to send your news. However, we receive dozens of emails everyday, so it's not a bad idea to follow your email up with a telephone call, just to make sure your message arrived safely and wasn't inadvertently deleted. Or better yet, just ask us to hit the reply button — so you'll get the message that we received your email on your computer. Attachments should be saved as word documents; photographs should be sent as jpg attachments.

We still accept news by fax and the old-fashioned way, through the US mail, or dropped off here at the Mariner office, in the Journal Building at 73 South St. in Hingham Square, above the Upper Crust.

News items should be as concise as possible and written in a narrative form. In other words, please write your news items in a "mini-story format" using complete sentences. Try not to send us flyers, which have to be completely reworded.

Here's the scoop on how to get your news in the Mariner:

Email: mford@cnc.com

FAX: 781-741-2931

In person: at the Mariner office, 73 South St., Hingham above the Upper Crust

Mail: The Cohasset Mariner, 73 South St., Hingham, MA 02043

Sports news email: jracicot@cnc.com

You can also check us out on the web at: www.wickedlocal.com/cohasset

Try to have your news to the Mariner by Wednesday morning for that week's issue, however, earlier is always better. We accept obituaries and letters to the editor until noon, Wednesday. If letters and obituaries come by email we can stretch that deadline a few hours.

We have forms available for wedding and engagement announcements with complete instructions at the Mariner office.

We welcome news tips and story ideas anytime.

Call Mary Ford, editor, at 781-741-2933; staff reporter Nancy White, at 781-741-2935, or sports editor, Joel Racicot at 781-837-4577.

We couldn't do our job without help from the community. So let us hear from you!

New Cohasset Mariner 'drop box'

The Cohasset Mariner has a new "drop box" and pickup location at Tedeschi's in the village. The drop box is on the counter in the front window around the corner to the left after you enter the front door.

The Mariner picks up at 8 a.m. on Mondays and Tuesdays. The drop box can be used to drop off glossy photographs, letters, flyers or other editorial copy.

The Mariner thanks Bill Ducharme at Tedeschi's for agreeing to allow Tedeschi's to be our new pickup location. For years the Mariner pickups were at Cohasset News, which is now a new dance studio. The Mariner thanks John and Larry Scott at Cohasset News for accepting Mariner items over many years. John and Larry are still at the Cohasset Butcher & Deli on Brook Street.

SEATING ARRANGEMENT

Mrs. Carole Bierman figures out the geometry that optimizes the seating arrangement for her trigonometry and calculus classes while getting her room ready on Wednesday. She will be entering her 11th year teaching at the high school. Cohasset schools start Tuesday. The middle-high school day has not changed and will begin promptly at 7:30a.m. and end at 2p.m. (Editor's note: cartoonist Jim Hamilton will be back next week).

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

PJ's tournament to benefit ASP

TO THE EDITOR:

The memory of PJ Trendowicz lives on in continuing service to those in need through his best friends. For each of us who have been fortunate enough to make one (or more) of the annual Cohasset Appalachia Service Projects, we know it to be a truly life-changing experience.

PJ Trendowicz was just such a person and his devotion and compassion continue to be a tremendous inspiration to all of us who enjoyed the privilege of working beside him in service to others. Several of PJ's friends have chosen to express this compassion through their development of an annual golf tournament in PJ's memory. I was speechless and deeply moved upon receiving the phone call with the news that Cohasset APS was to share in the proceeds.

All of us in Cohasset ASP are so proud to accept this most generous gift in PJ's memory. We, and the families we serve in Appalachia can never thank all of you enough! "One Love, PJ!!"

Rev. Gary A. Ritts
on behalf of the Cohasset Appalachia Service Project

Thanks to Cohasset!

TO THE EDITOR:

My Name is Peter T. Prasinos and I am the guy who has been in front of the French Memories Bakery on Sunday morning playing guitar and singing some classic rock, contemporary country and blues. I am writing to thank all the wonderful people in Cohasset for their generosity and nice compliments on my music. From very young to old I have been touched by everyone and have enjoyed playing outside the bakery very much this summer.

Thank you, People of Cohasset.

Absentee voting may be done during normal office hours until noontime on Monday, Sept. 15, at which time the office will be closed to prepare for the election. Residents should vote in person on Election Day if in town and able to come to the polls. People may vote absentee for the following reasons only:

The application should include the legal voting address of the voter, which ballot is requested, Democrat, Republican, Green-Rainbow or Working Families, where the ballot is to be mailed, and the signature of the applicant. If a voter is Unenrolled (Independent) he needs to choose a ballot and will remain unenrolled after the primary. Those enrolled in a party must vote that ballot. Changing party affiliation had to be done on or before Aug. 27.

Town Parking Lot to be closed Sept. 3

MAKING TRACKS

TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN

Little Harbor Project – As mentioned last week several more streets were scheduled to be paved by the end of the week. The residents of these ways can now enjoy their first paving in quite a few months. The accompanying photo shows the roller smoothing the new paving near the Beech Street end of Keene Way.

Farmer's Market BIG change – As a result of the impending construction in the Common area, the Farmer's Market is relocating to the Little League Field. All parking for market-goers will then be at the Cohasset Swim Center lot, off of Sohier Street near the Greenbush tracks.

Greenbush Project – Town Parking Lot to close Wednesday (Sept. 3). – Last Friday, we had a meeting with the MBTA and CBB to review the work remaining to be done in the Town Parking Lot. Essentially, they need to do the final paving next to the Teen Center. In addition, they have agreed to re-grade several low spots where water puddles up in the parking lot. And, finally they will add the striping, which has been missed since the lot was first torn up for construction. Painted parking spaces will truly be welcomed. That should make the lot less chaotic. As we go to press, CBB notified us that: the Town Parking Lot will be closed on Wednesday, Sept. 3, so CBB can to accommodate their regrading and paving work. We are asking all business employees to park around the Common to keep street parking available for your customers. Parking will also be available at the new Town lot on Pleasant Street.

Deep Run follow-up – Last week we mentioned a bit about the history of the name "Deep Run." Well, it turns out that that may not be correct. Another long-term resident mentioned that the road was called Deep Run by Royal Barry Wills when he bought the old Bolles estate on Jerusalem Road. Apparently he may have named it Deep Run because the 14-acre parcel was long and narrow running "deep" away from the ocean. The main house on the estate, located near Jerusalem Road, was demolished before the Second World War and most of the out buildings were in general disrepair when Wills bought the property in the 1940s. We apologize for the poor quality small photo of the old main house, but it's the only one we could find. What a grand place it must have been looking over Jerusalem Road and the ocean.

Emergency Notification System - Did you know...– Did you know that the Town maintains two entirely different emergency notification systems? One is operated by and for the sole use of the Cohasset School System. The other is for use by the Town for safety, emergency or special purpose notifications under the control of the Town Manager. Both systems are used to pass messages of a critical and urgent nature to residents and businesses from their respective organizations. Generally, the Town's system will deal with issues of public safety and health. Please keep in mind that these two systems have nothing to do with the emergency forces statewide 911 system.

We'd like to talk about the Town's emergency notification system because there are many features in this system that may be foreign to you. The Town's emergency notification system is provided by a service called Connect-CTY. This is a very flexible service that has many notification options. This system allows selected groups of people to receive notifications, based on their location, names, or by predefined groups, such as all or just some Town employees. For example, all residents within in a neighborhood could be contacted, or residents on a given street, or just a specific Town department. What's really interesting is that each resident or business can be notified on up to three separate phone numbers, a text message number, and up to two email addresses. So, even if you are not home you can receive notifications on your cell phone, your email or Blackberry. This system obtains its initial information from the phone directory data that Verizon maintains for the whole phone industry in our area.

One of the reasons this system was chosen is that it can deliver simultaneous calls to in excess of 7,300 different phones in less than one hour. In fact in a test, the basic system delivered over 800,000 thirty second calls per hour. That's a lot of calls! Of course, this is all accomplished by a special purpose computer system. Unanswered calls are tried three times before being reported an "unanswered."

But, there are also some quirks you may not know about the system. For example, if you have voice-over internet phone service (VOIP) there is no way for the database to know your address, since this is considered a portable phone number. The same is true for a cell phone. If your phone service is provided by someone other than Verizon, it sometimes takes a protracted period of time before the data gets into the Verizon database. Also, if you have more than one phone number the system may only call one of those numbers. And, the system has no way of knowing which of those numbers you may prefer. However, there is an easy way to correct all of this. All you need to do is go to the Town web page (www.cohassetmass.org) and click on the link in the lower left, a copy of which is in the illustration. Log on by clicking on "Add My Contact Info" and supply the information asked for. In subsequent logins, you can update your data in the emergency notification system.

You can add or change the following to your Connect CTY notification information:

- Primary Phone Number
- Secondary Phone Number
- Alternate Phone Number
- Text Message Phone Number
- Primary Email Address
- Secondary Email Address

The Town web site also offers answers to numerous questions you may have about the system and its operation. Additional information about the system features and use is also available on the supplier's web site: www.blackboardconnectcty.com Again, this is NOT the same system used by the schools, nor is it connected in any way with the statewide 911 system.

The vanishing vice president

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

It was obvious something important was happening, all those cameras pointed at the little white house in the trees.

Perhaps they had found Natalee Holloway, although I didn't see Greta in the crowd. Or Caylee Anthony, but Greta wouldn't have missed that one either.

It was three o'clock in the morning, with half the country asleep and the other half surrounding the house in Wilmington, Del., that the true meaning of the stakeout was revealed.

Joe Biden, the senator from Delaware, had been chosen to run for vice president alongside Barack Obama.

By this time, the selection of a running mate for Barack had reached such epic proportions that I figured it would be announced by nothing less than a puff of white smoke from a chimney.

I can remember the day when John Nance Garner, who was picked to run for vice president to help FDR win the state of Texas, pronounced his new job "not worth a pitcher of warm spit."

I was 9 years old at the time and not for several years was I deemed mature enough to hear the word that old Cactus Jack really used.

Even our own John Adams, the first vice president, was dragged kicking and screaming into office.

"My country has in its wisdom contrived for me the most insignificant office that ever the invention of man contrived or his imagination conceived," he wrote.

Thomas Marshall of Indiana, vice president under Woodrow Wilson, didn't think much of the office, either.

"Once there were two brothers," he said. "One ran away to sea, the other was elected vice president, and nothing was ever heard of either of them again."

As presiding officer of the Senate, while senators were in full voice debating the needs of the country, he mused aloud, "What this country needs is a really good five-cent cigar."

One president, Franklin Pierce, our only chief executive from New Hampshire, served the entire four years of his term in office without the benefit of a vice president.

William Rufus King of Alabama, his running mate, was fatally ill with tuberculosis at the time and was sworn into office in Havana, Cuba. He died before taking up his duties.

King had another drawback, too. Unmarried, he shared a room for more than 20 years with another bachelor, a future president, James Buchanan, and rumor had it they were more than just friends.

And, 150 years later, we get skittish when a woman and a black man run for president!

President Franklin D. Roosevelt thought so little of the vice presidency that his successor, Harry Truman, didn't even know the atom bomb was under development until he had to use it four months later.

Theodore Roosevelt was happy as the governor of New York in 1900 but the Republican boss of the state, Thomas Platt, was not happy with Teddy's reformist tendencies. He wished him to disappear.

So he forced his maverick governor onto the national ticket with William McKinley, the presidential candidate. They won. Seven months later, McKinley was dead and Teddy the reformer was president.

Which proves you gotta be careful what you wish for, especially when you pick a vice president.

Children: The case against home schooling

DRIVING WHILE TYPING

JOHN LENGYEL

I never wanted to be one of those parents who counts down the hours till summer vacation ends so he can get a little peace and quiet again. I never wanted to be a lot of things. I never wanted to be a hard boiled antihero either, with a .44 Magnum and a taste for fast Irish women, but you play the hand you were dealt. The fact is, studies show that a well-trained teacher does a better job of preventing my children from destroying my sofa than I can. And just being in school instead of home spilling a blueberry smoothie on my computer can add up to eighty years to a child's life. You can't sniff at those statistics.

The best answer during the summer is to take the kids outdoors where they can hike and bike and dissipate their energies without doing any real damage. So last weekend we drove to Acadia National Park in Maine and returned with eleven new stitches just below Emily's left knee. The ten hours in the car and the afternoon we spent in the Bar Harbor emergency room notwithstanding, our trip was every bit as fun and relaxing as a moose attack.

Children have always been the worst relaxers ever. They hate relaxing and campaign hard to end the practice by others. Yet parents persist in thinking this time, this year's family vacation will be a break from their jobs sword-fishing in the North Atlantic. Then they return from Knott's Berry Farm and offer to go out on the high seas any time, in any weather. Family vacations have been driving productivity in this country for decades. You practically have to beg American workers to take a week off. The irony is that if we ever figured out how to stop brothers from terrorizing their sisters in restaurants, the American economy would never recover and the terrorists who aren't our children would win.

My idea of the perfect solution—the fantasy getaway for both parents and kids, would be some kind of cruise, maybe to tropical Caribbean ports, with exciting supervised activities for kids, and spas, dance clubs and fine dining for the adults. The whole thing could even have an overarching theme, like a Disney or Pixar theme. Unfortunately this idea lives only in my mind. Plus I just remembered I hate boats.

Anyway I'm more than ready for school to start on Tuesday. I just hope my girls don't hold everyone else back for the first few weeks as they prod their rusty brains into multiplying, conjugating, and locating their assigned cliques in the lunch room again. My kids seem to take the anti-academic spirit of summer vacation to new extremes every year, refusing to solve any problems, use numbers, or even make the intellectual effort required to avoid soiling themselves for two and a half months. When I came home last night to find them all watching Fox News I finally had to intervene, giving each of them an IV drip and cutting the power just seconds before The O'Reilly Factor. It was a very close call, but within half an hour they were lucid enough to begin destroying the sofa again, and I knew they were out of danger.

Cohasset students head back to school Tuesday line up with their classmates," said Sheehan. Particular attention is paid to acclimate the incoming kindergarteners to their new routine.

On Aug. 26, there was a play date for all kindergarteners so they could meet their teachers and classmates on the playground. The kindergarten students have another opportunity to get acquainted with their teachers and see their classroom on Tuesday and Wednesday. The official first day for kindergartners and preschoolers will be Sept. 4.

For the returning students in first and second grade an opening assembly will be held on the first day of school. New staff and new students joining the Osgood community will be introduced. The entire school will raise their voices to sing the Osgood School Song and talk about goals for the school year.

There will be many new faces among the Osgood staff this fall. New classroom teachers include: Mrs. Beth Grady (grade 2), Mrs. Karen McDavitt (grade 2), and Ms. Molly Wilkinson (grade 1). Ms. Sarah Bordanaro will be the teacher in our new Primary Learning Center, and a new math specialist, Mrs. Kathryn Brooks, will share her expertise with both the Osgood and Deer Hill staff. Mr. Erick Amero is the new director of the before- and after-school program and will offer a variety of enrichment activities for the children.

Second-grade teacher, Margaret Holland, and a third-year veteran at the Osgood School, meets one of her new students, Jack Mahoney, 7 right, in her classroom on Wednesday afternoon.

Deer Hill School

For Principal Jennifer deChiara, the first day of school is something she looks forward to every fall.

"Without a doubt [it is] my favorite day of the year. The students and the staff come in with such positive energy. The teachers, the desks, the lockers, being in a new grade — it's all very exciting to students, and that makes for a really fun day," said deChiara.

There is lots that is new and exciting for the third, fourth and fifth graders at Deer Hill. School will begin at 8:30a.m. and students will be dismissed at 2:30p.m.

"The Cohasset Education Foundation (CEF) funded a Science, Technology, Engineering, and Mathematics ("STEM") Lab!" said deChiara. Lab tables, microscopes, all new state of the art technology, inquiry based science kits — even lab coats for the teachers are a part of the lab. "Students at Deer Hill can finally act like real scientists — not just read about science from a textbook."

A new coordinated Literacy Center puts teaching resources in one place to help teachers maximize the resources more than before.

New technology, including a new hand-held technology, will allow teachers to target individual student needs in English/Language Arts and Mathematics. The PSO has funded a collection of mentor texts for our writing program — a set of exemplary books and writing passages that teachers can use specifically to model high quality writing traits.

"We even have new playground mulch!" said deChiara, adding the school is squeaky-clean, thanks to the custodial staff. "Summertime is usually a period of rest for school personnel — our guys have worked tirelessly to make sure the building is bright and shiny for the first day."

> "It's an opportunity to look at what you did last year and what you can do better for this year."
> — Supt. of Schools Denise Walsh

Like the third-grade students, several teachers and staff are starting anew at Deer Hill. Mrs. Kathryn Brooks, a former elementary school teacher from Weymouth Public Schools, is the new Math Specialist (shared with Osgood School). Mrs. Katie Penwell has just joined the Fifth Grade Team as a classroom teacher, replacing Mrs. Joan Cassiani who retired after 37 years of service. Mrs. Penwell was chosen from an initial 80 applicants.

Beginning her second year in Cohasset, deChiara is looking forward to leading Deer Hill in the 2008-2009 school year.

"The more I get to know the people here — teachers, families, students, other administrators — the more settled I feel. (Although I don't know if a school principal can ever — or should ever — feel too settled!) People here have demonstrated such support for the Deer Hill School and learning. Highest quality education is really a focus in the community," said deChiara.

Middle-High School

It has been a working summer for Middle-High School Principal Joel Antolini. There are 10 new staff members on board for the 2008-2009 school year and four teachers have moved from the middle school to the high school.

"We have been working hard to hire highly qualified faculty, and preparing for the school year so that the curriculum, instructional activities, and assessment strategies are in place for all students and staff, and ensuring that the facility is clean and ready for the community," said Antolini.

The school day has not changed and will begin promptly at 7:30a.m. and end at 2p.m. For the high school, it won't take them long to get back into the swing of thing. The block scheduling will remain the same with students will see four of their five teachers during a typical day.

However, there have been some changes made to the middle school schedule. The middle school students will have five periods each day for English, math, science, social studies and foreign language and an additional two periods per day for exploratory courses such as math lab, technology, art, music, health, and physical education.

"The X period we had in the past will no longer meet. Some students did homework during that period, so parents might notice more of a homework load for students. (The change) allows us to make full use of instructional time during the school day," said Antolini.

HEALTH NOTES

EEE, WNV: acronyms you should know about

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

"Even though many of us think of Labor Day Weekend as the end of summer, mosquitoes will be around until a hard frost."
—Dr. Al DeMaria, DPH State Epidemiologist

Last week, the Board of Health received a report that a blue jay from Scituate has tested positive for the West Nile virus. The bird's date of death was Aug. 20. Therefore, no more dead birds will be tested from Scituate, Hingham, Cohasset and Norwell. We will, however, continue to accept reports of dead birds through the West Nile virus hotline.

In addition to these mosquito samples, WNV has also been found in crows from Barnstable, Edgartown, East Longmeadow, Longmeadow, Norfolk, North Andover, and Hatfield, and in blue jays from Barnstable, Carlisle, Hampden, Scituate, and Watertown.

"Even though many of us think of Labor Day Weekend as the end of summer, mosquitoes will be around until a hard frost," said DPH State Epidemiologist Dr. Al DeMaria. "We are still seeing a lot of virus around – in every part of the state. Kids will soon be involved in after school activities during the time of day when mosquitoes are most active, so we want parents and schools to remind young people to cover up and use bug spray to help prevent mosquito bites."

• Eastern Equine Encephalitis (EEE)While there weren't any human cases of EEE during 2007, there were 13 cases with 6 deaths from 2004 through 2006. In 2007, there were six human cases of WNV in Massachusetts.

• What are the symptoms of WNV? The majority of people who are infected with WNV (approximately 80 percent) will have no symptoms. A smaller number of people who become infected (20 percent) will have symptoms such as fever, headache, body aches, nausea, vomiting, and sometimes swollen lymph glands. They may also develop a skin rash on the chest, stomach and back.

Both EEE and WNV are usually spread to humans through the bite of an infected mosquito. WNV can infect people of all ages but people over the age of 50 are at higher risk for severe disease. EEE is a generally more serious disease in all ages and can even cause death.

What You should do – Mosquitoes can begin to multiply in any puddle or standing water that lasts for more than four days When dealing with West Nile virus, prevention is your best bet. Keep mosquitoes out of your house by repairing any holes in your screens and making sure they are tightly attached to all your doors and windows.

Remove areas of standing water around your home.

• Look around outside your house for containers and other things that might collect water and turn them over, regularly empty them, or dispose of them.

• Drill holes in the bottom of recycling containers that are left outdoors so that water can drain out.

• Clean clogged roof gutters; remove leaves and debris that may prevent drainage of rainwater.

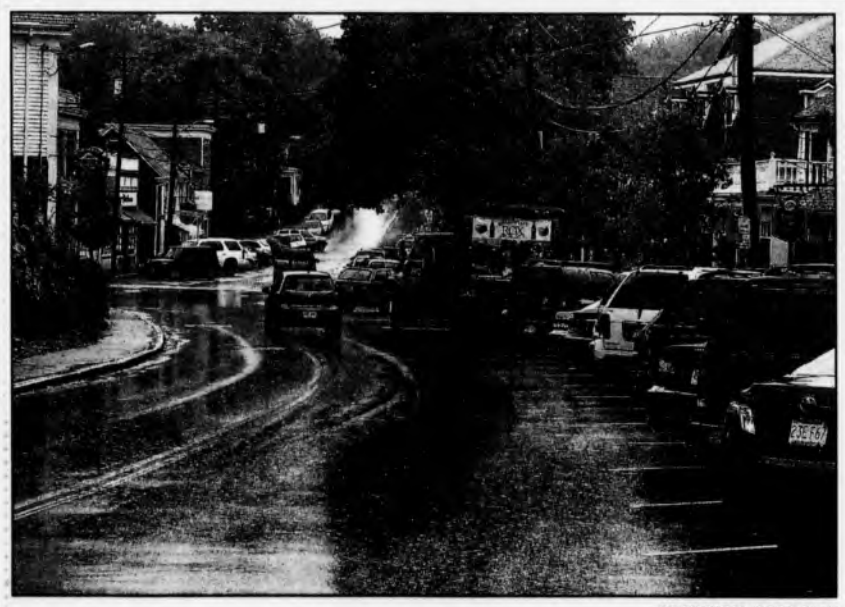
• Turn over plastic wading pools and wheelbarrows when not in use.

• Change the water in birdbaths every few days; aerate ornamental ponds or stock them with fish.

• Keep swimming pools clean and properly chlorinated; remove standing water from pool covers.

• Use landscaping to eliminate standing water that collects on your property.

• Fighting mosquito bites reduces your risk of getting this disease, along with others that mosquitoes can carry.



Avoid Mosquito Bites – Use Insect Repellent on exposed skin when you go outdoors. Use an EPA-registered insect repellent such as those with DEET, picaridin or oil of lemon eucalyptus. Even a short time being outdoors can be long enough to get a mosquito bite. Clothing Can Help Reduce Mosquito Bites. When weather permits, wear long-sleeves, long pants and socks when outdoors. Mosquitoes may bite through thin clothing, so spraying clothes with repellent containing permethrin or another EPA-registered repellent will give extra protection. Don't apply repellents containing permethrin directly to skin. Do not spray repellent on the skin under your clothing

DEET products should not be used on infants under two months of age and should be used in concentrations of 30% or less on older children. Oil of lemon eucalyptus should not be used on children under three years of age. Permethrin products are intended for use on items such as clothing, shoes, bed nets and camping gear and should not be applied to skin.

Be aware of peak mosquito hours — The hours from dusk to dawn are peak biting times for many species of mosquitoes. Take extra care during evening and early morning.

Remember: The chance that any one person is going to become ill from a single mosquito bite remains low. The risk of severe illness and death is highest for people over 50 years old, although people of all ages can become ill.

School board addresses military recruiter, counter-recruiter questions

Sundays ago where Cohasset was named as a school that has allowed anti-war representatives attend career fairs. The larger story focused on an on-going discussion for Bridgewater-Raynham High School where a Bridgewater-based group Citizens for an Informed Community, an antiwar activist group, wants to be allowed to attend the school's annual career day, just as military recruiters are.

While it is true Cohasset has allowed counter-recruiters at the school, they have not been a part of career fairs, Middle-High School Principal Joel Antolini said. In fact Cohasset High does not hold career or job fairs.

Cohasset has let a counter-recruitment group attend the lunchroom hours, just like the military recruiters.

The counter-recruiters have been allowed to come in over the past two years and passively educate students on the anti-war movement. Like the military recruiters, they have to wait for students to approach them, rather than actively engage students in the cafeteria, Flynn said.

Under a provision of the federal No Child Left Behind law, high schools are required to provide military recruiters the same access as colleges and employers.

Flynn addressed the issue publicly at Wednesday's School Committee meeting, which was televised. He described the controversy brewing in Cohasset as a "tempest in a teapot."

He said military recruiters have been coming to CHS "forever" and will continue to do so. He said many great Cohasset students have gone on to join the military and have done great things.

"Cohasset has had a strong record of supporting the military and some wonderful people from town have done great things in the military and we do not want to minimize that," Flynn said. "The radio show came out of left field and we do not want people left with a misconception."

Flynn explained a parent had requested that a counter-recruitment group be allowed to make presentations in the classroom and that request was denied. The group was given permission to set up a table outside the cafeteria so that students, who had an interest, could educate themselves. They cannot approach students.

Flynn said the schools "support the veterans, support the military and support free speech."

"We never put the military recruiters with the anti-war protesters," he said. "There is no situation where the military and anti-war group are in the same room together."

Flynn said the schools are very supportive of veterans and the military. "The implication put forth on the radio never happened," he said.

Flynn said a parent, who had a connection with the counter-recruitment group, approached Antolini about two years ago.

School Committee member Alfred Slanetz said while he supported the military's recruitment efforts, he said there is value for students to see the other perspective as well.

Military recruiters are usually present at college fairs that are held at various high schools and are open to area students. Under a provision of the federal No Child Left Behind law, high schools are required to provide military recruiters the same access as colleges and employers.

From the CHS Student Handbook

As part of the federal education law, "No Child Left Behind," all secondary schools that receive federal funds under this law, including Cohasset High School, must provide military recruiters and any institution of higher learning, access to the name, address and telephone listings of all secondary school students. However, parents and/or students may request that this information not be released and if such a request is made, we will not provide it.

In addition to military recruiters, other third parties may request that we provide "directory" information to them on our students. According to (Massachusetts General Law) such "directory" information may include but is not limited to: name, address, telephone, activities, sports, degrees, and honors, etc.

Unless you notify the principal on or before Oct. 1, that you do not wish to have your student's information released, this information may be released without further notice or consent. Please be advised that you have the right to refuse release of this information at any time, but that until you do so in writing, this information will be released.

The full student handbook is posted on the school's web site: www.cohassetk12.org. This information is on page 32.

Policy at Hingham High School

HHS Principal Paula Girouard-McCann has said military recruiters have the same access as college representatives at Hingham High. She said they come once a year and set up a table in the cafeteria. All branches of the service are welcome, and most come, she said.

Girouard-McCann said that the school does not hold a special event for colleges. College admissions representatives and military recruiters may set up an appointment and come at different times during the school year.

"They arrange a date in consultation with the counseling department," she said. " That way we can publicize that they are coming. We post a list of the college reps or military reps in the counseling office and on the daily bulletin."

She said recruiters have requested to come multiple times, but are limited to once a year.

Come to the 32nd Tolman MDA telethon party!

24-hour Labor Day weekend event

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

For many years, Jay Tolman and his family have packed their bags and headed to Hingham from New Jersey just before Labor Day to host the annual Tolman Muscular Dystrophy Telethon Party at Hingham Community Center.

It wasn't an easy thing to do with a growing family. Tolman cheerfully said more than once over the years, "When we travel, I feel like the Rolling Stones on tour!"

But Tolman, who grew up in Hingham, and his wife, Jodi, never complained. They were happy to host the event every year with their three children, Charlie, Chloe, and Jack, because the cause means so much to them.

This year, though, the trip will be much shorter because the Tolmans recently moved to Cohasset.

"We're so excited to be here," Tolman said. "Being next to the town I grew up in is wonderful! Our younger children, Chloe and Jack, have made some great friends already!

"In the past, every time we came up for the telethon or to visit family, we would also take a drive down Jerusalem Road and Jodi would say to me, 'Do you think we could ever live here?'" Tolman said. "Now we're here and couldn't be happier. It's great to be back home! The thought struck me recently that we would be driving home to Cohasset instead of New Jersey on Monday night! No more long-distance trips during Labor Day weekend!"

Despite the name of this event, it is not a phone bank but a celebration of the national Jerry Lewis MDA telethon.

Although no one makes phone calls, donations are collected throughout this Hingham gathering in various ways — by children and adults collecting on street corners and by partygoers tossing a contribution into a large fishbowl at the community center. It's all about having fun while supporting a good cause.

Tolman has enjoyed watching the event evolve over the many years he has hosted the party. "I think back to a handful of friends staying up 24 hours to watch the Jerry Lewis telethon (at his former family home in Hingham) and raising a few dollars to help fight muscular dystrophy," Tolman said. "We raised $50 the first year. It's hard to believe that was 31 years ago."

Since that time, the event has raised more than $406,000 for the MDA. "The tradition continues, as does the outpouring of caring and love," he said. "Thanks in part to those who attend the Hingham telethon party, advancements continue to be made in the fight against muscular dystrophy and other neuromuscular diseases."

Tolman has no plans to discontinue the event. "Until there's a cure, there will be a telethon party," he said, echoing the continuing theme. "The outpouring of support from the local community is amazing and has kept this event alive for 32 years.".

The Tolman family and countless other volunteers are gearing up for this year's party, which promises fun for everyone. (See related sidebar.)

They help the Tolmans organize the event, make homemade cookies, taco salad, and other tasty offerings, and post flyers to invite the community.

"Our telethon team of volunteers is hard at work making final preparations for this weekend's event," Tolman said. "Everyone works so hard every year to bring in more money to help end muscular dystrophy. Without this team this event would never happen. I can't thank them enough for what they do."

Thousands of volunteers have participated since the first event in 1977. Many return year after year, forming new friendships and renewing old ones.

Tolman attributes the fundraiser's continuous success to widespread support from Hingham and other South Shore residents, as well as those who travel from longer distances, some from out of state.

For many years, Jay's father, John, has traveled from Florida to support the effort by counting the money people donate and pitching in where needed.

MDA-funded scientists have made great strides toward treatment or cures for neuromuscular disorders over the years, Tolman said. For further information, call the MDA at (781) 575-1881.

John Tolman, who is Jay Tolman's father, updates the numbers as more money comes in during last year's Tolman Muscular Dystrophy Telethon Party at the Hingham Community Center.

Hingham MDA telethon event is this weekend

The arrival of Labor Day means it's time once again for the Tolman Muscular Dystrophy Association 24-hour Telethon Party. The event, now in its 32nd year, is scheduled for Aug. 31 and Sept. 1 at Hingham Community Center, 70 South St.

Despite the name, guests do many fun things and watch the Jerry Lewis Telethon on a large-screen TV, but they do not make calls.

Attending has become a tradition for many families living in Hingham, other South Shore communities, and beyond.

The event begins at 7 p.m. Sunday. Lively, fully costumed Irish Step Dancers and singer-songwriter Alli Beaudry will kick off the party, followed by more fun — and good food — continuing throughout the night as untiring volunteers and supporters "Stay Up and Watch the Stars Come Out" from midnight to 8 a.m.

WCVB-Channel 5 will be at the event between 7 and 8 p.m. for a live taping of the party on Sunday.

This popular annual dance party features music with well-known D.J. Paul Ciccone, hors d'oeuvres, games, and prizes.

Wake-up call (for those who manage to catch a few winks Sunday night) is from 9 to 11 a.m., when a continental breakfast is served.

Then a huge Labor Day cookout is planned from 1 to 6 p.m., featuring the music of Majic, a South Shore band back by popular demand, clowns, pony rides, balloons, face painting, T-shirts, raffles, food, the showing of classic Dean Martin and Jerry Lewis comedies, and lots more. The Hingham telethon finale is from 6 to 7 p.m.

For more information about the event, raffle, how to make a donation, photos, and the history of the telethon party, visit www.tolmantelethon.com or call the telethon hotline at (781) 749-9786 beginning Sun., Aug. 31.

The MDA is a voluntary health organization dedicated to eradicating more than 40 forms of the disease.

Those who cannot attend the event but want to donate may send their contributions, made payable to MDA/Muscular Dystrophy Association, to: MDA Telethon, c/o Jay Tolman, 3 Forest Circle, Cohasset, MA 02025. Donations may also be made online at www.tolman-telethon.com.

The proceeds from this year's party will be donated to the MDA in memory of former Hingham resident Richard Berberian Jr., son of Richard and Joan Berberian; former Weymouth resident John Fasci, Jr., son of John and Mary Fasci; Jonathon Wolf, son of Thomas and Pat Wolf; and Mattie Stepanek, son of Jeni Stepanek, all of whom succumbed to the disease. The spirit and courage of these young men and their families have been a source of inspiration to many.

The Skippers celebrate after Dana Valentine scored a touchdown last season. Valentine will be a key player for this year's team.

Skippers ready for some football

Inexperienced squad has talent but needs game-minutes

By Joel Racicot
JRACICOT@CNC.COM

Opening kickoff is just a week away.

The Cohasset High School football team will start the season Sept. 5 at Quincy High School, the newest member of the Patriot League, for a 7 p.m. start. It is hard to believe that football season is already here, but CHS head coach Pete Afanasiw has been busy plugging in holes left by last year's graduating class that included 12 seniors.

"We're trying to fill the right players in at the right positions," Afanasiw said. "We came in this year with a lot of open positions and we don't have all the answers yet."

Cohasset finished 3-5-2 in 2006 and 8-2 in 2007. This will be Afanasiw's third year at the helm and he hopes his team can continue to start fast, and like last year, continue to finish strong.

"I've noticed in the last two years we have started off quick," he said. "It isn't a matter of starting good but we want to finish well. Last year we did a good job going in that direction."

"The teams that will do good are the ones that can stay healthy and make the least mistakes."

Cohasset High School football coach Pete Afanasiw

Anderson Lynner and Derrick Schwantner are captains. Lynner will play both offensive and defensive lines and is the only returning starter on the offense. Schwantner will play tight end and defensive back. Other key seniors include; Mike Froio (RB/LB), Alec Livingstone (RB/LB), Matt Wasel (OL/DB), Nick Simonds (DL) and Marcus Charles (WR/DB).

Juniors Dana Valentine (RB) and Brendan Doonan (WR/DB) are extremely talented players that will make an impact on both sides of the ball.

Valentine will be a focal point. "He is someone we are going to count on considerably," said Afanasiw. "On offense he has great instincts and on defense he is an aggressive hitter. He has a nose for the football."

Two players are battling for the quarterback position, John Maher (Jr.) and Jeff Cavanaro (So.). Maher saw action last year when David Snowdale (Class of '08) went out with an injury.

"He learned a lot," said Afanasiw. "He has good composure and runs the offense well without a lot of experience."

The league should be balanced again this year with usual suspect Abington and potentially explosive Mashpee leading the way.

"There is a lot of parity," Afanasiw said about the South Shore League. "The teams that will do good are the ones that can stay healthy and make the least mistakes."

Another successful summer for the Black Jacks

Cohasset natives anchor squad

By Ben Woodson
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

As they finish their fifth season the Black Jacks of 21 Lacrosse continue to impress college coaches throughout the country. For the third year, and fourth consecutive national qualifying tournament, the Black Jacks made the final four enabling them to be invited to the "Dick's Sporting Goods National Championship" in Tampa, Florida from January 2 to January 4, 2009.

The "Gait Cup" (named for former Syracuse greats Paul and Gary Gait), held at Gettysburg College from July 2 to July 5, was this year's qualifying tournament. Despite being in the toughest bracket in the tournament (3 of the final 4 teams came from the Black Jacks' bracket), the Black Jacks qualified for the playoffs and continued on to meet the eventual champions, Chesapeake Rock, in the semifinals. Two of the Black Jacks (6-3) three losses came at the hands of the star-studded Chesapeake Rock made up of prep school players form the Greater Baltimore area.

This year's team was led on attack by Jake Harvey (Duxbury), Pat Lawlor (Hanover), Wil Delorey (Norwell), and Greg Reynolds and Kyle Crowley (Scituate). The defense was anchored by Jake Gray (Kimball Union), Pat Johnston (Norwell) and Blair Friedensohn in goal. The Black Jack's close defense was led by Dan Morrissey-Martin (Belmont Hill), Tim Curran (Hanover), Jack Dings (Holderness), Paul McInerney (Scituate), Kevin Hannigan (Hanover/Endicott) and Alex Cuomo (Scituate / Keene State).

The workhorses of any lacrosse team are their midfielders. The Black Jacks were led at longstick middie by Marty Noenickx (Scituate) and Vin Curran (Cohasset).

The short stick middies included Bryan Barry (Duxbury), Paul Donovan (Norwell), Luke Ernst (Thayer), Kyle Ewanouski (BC High), Thomas Flibotte (Cohasset), Wes Hawkins (Scituate), Halsey Landon (St. George's), Dodger Scheller (Norwell), and Zack Triner (Marshfield).

When Coach Rick Bagby was asked to comment on the summer, he said, "The players were awesome. Every single player contributed to our success. I guess you could say we have built a reputation of being a tough competitive team."

If you are interested in being a Black Jack, the tryouts for the 2009 team will be held on Sunday September 14 and Sunday September 21. For more information contact Andrea Kinnealey, GM, at akinnealey@comcast.net, or Coach Bagby at rbagby@21lacrosse.com.

So sad to see the Games go

FROM THE SIDELINES

JULIE ANN NEVERO

So the Summer Olympics in Beijing officially ended Sunday night and I'm a very sad girl.

While my boyfriend is certainly going to like not having to watch girls tumbling and vaulting and swimmers doing laps in the pool, I am not. These Olympics were arguably the most memorable for me in recent years. These Games had it all. Drama, heartbreak, excitement, dominance, controversy, surprises, and more, every night was memorable for me.

Join me as I fondly look back at the final week of competition in Beijing.

Born to run

For years, the US has been the leaders on the Olympic sprinting scene. Carl Lewis, Flo-Jo, Gail Devers, Michael Johnson. These are runners who put American sprinting on the map and were consistently named the "Fastest Man/Woman on the Planet."

All that changed at these Summer Games when a man named Bolt left everyone in the dust. The 6-foot, 5-inch Jamaican sprinter may not have won gold in as many events as American swimmer Michael Phelps but Usain Bolt's success on the track was equally as impressive.

The aptly named Bolt won gold medals in all three of his events and he did so in the most dominant of fashions. Very rarely are competitors blown away in sprints, but Bolt did just that every time he stepped onto the track. He won the 100-meters (a race typically won on a lean at the tape) by seven strides! Those familiar with the sport know just how incredulous that is. His time of 9.69 broke the World Record (9.72).

Then came the 200-meters and another dominant finish. Bolt came off the turn and strode to the tape with no one else in the frame. Another gold medal and World Record (19.30) for Bolt, who won his final gold in the 4x100, where he ran the third leg and helped the Jamaicans break another World mark (37.1).

Some may not have appreciated his over-the-top celebrations but I personally think the guy was entitled to a showboating. Bolt blew the competition away. Simple as that.

Spiking the competition

After their 2004 gold medal win in Athens, the names Walsh and May became household ones. Some watched because they were fans of the sport of beach volleyball but I know some of my male friends tuned in because of their attire.

While Kerri Walsh and Misty May-Treanor may look great in bikinis let's not forget these two women are athletes and what they've accomplished over the last four years has some calling them the best beach volleyball pair of all time (male or female). Last week's straight-set win over a duo from China in the Gold Medal Match upped their unbeaten streak to 108-0 in the 19 tournaments they've played in since Athens.

But they weren't the only American pair that ruled the sand this Summer. The US men's duo of Phil Dalhausser and Todd Rogers bested the Brazilians in three sets to complete a gold medal sweep for the Americans in beach volleyball.

Perhaps the most emotional volleyball win for the USA came indoors. Two weeks after American head men's volleyball coach Hugh McCutcheon's father-in-law was knifed to death at a popular tourist attraction in Beijing in a random attack of violence, he led his squad to gold medal on the final day of competition. The Americans accomplished the feat in a four-set squeaker against Brazil, the defending Olympic gold medalists.

And it was nearly a clean sweep for US volleyball with the American women also playing in the indoor finals against Brazil. But the women had to settle for the silver. Still, not a bad showing for the USA.

Reflecting

In my opinion, the Summer Olympics in Beijing was one of the most memorable Games in recent years. I'll miss having something to watch every night in a season of reruns and I just can't wait for the next Summer Games in London in 2012.

Piano Lessons

Piano lessons resume

Priscilla D. Daniels, professional pianist and teacher of pianoforte, resumes her lesson-schedule at her Beach Street home in Cohasset. Her personalized instruction has attracted students who have had careers in music, while others play just for pleasure.

Mrs. Daniels is a graduate of the New England Conservatory of Music of Boston, magna cum laude. She is a member of Alpha Chi Omega, national sorority, and Pi Kappa Lambda, honorary professional society. She has taught in Swampscott, Lincoln, Norwood, and currently in Cohasset.

As part of each lesson she incorporates music theory, harmony, rhythm study and expression. She encourages her students to improvise and compose, and strives to communicate a love and appreciation for the fine arts through the medium of the piano.

Music is an art

A well-known fact among educators is that music training and participation assists children (and indeed adults!) with cognitive and social development. It is a science, precise and specific, and needs exact acoustics. It is mathematical and rhythmically based on subdivisions of time. Music is a foreign language, but is universally understood by everyone, whatever his or her native tongue. Notation is a highly developed type of shorthand that uses symbols to represent ideas of sound. It is history as it reflects environments and eras of its creation. It is physical education, as the making of it requires fantastic coordination. It is emotional therapy.

Furthermore, there is no age limit in either direction for learning or enjoying music. Babies hear it in the womb. Teens listen constantly to their iPods. Elderly folk work out arthritic kinks by playing piano, or dancing. Beyond the ebony and ivory of the keyboard, music does not know black or white, right, wrong, good or bad. If we let it, music creates in us a freedom of spirit that is beyond judgment or reproach.

Most of all, music is art. It teaches us to feel. We teach, learn, listen to and perform music so that we can be more human, sensitive, gentle, good, love more. Harmony and sound surround us. All life is reflected through music in some way and speaks to us if only we will listen.

The Wall and beyond in eastern Germany

Matthew J. Gill
GATEHOUSE NEWS SERVICE

BERLIN - On one of the remaining sections of the Berlin Wall there is an image of two flowing beings done up in red, white and blue. According to the slogan above, they are "Dancing To Freedom."

Nearby are countless paintings, slogans, song lyrics and messages — left in many different colors and languages. All serve as artistic memorials to the fact the Wall, built in 1961 to divide a city and country, came down in 1989, paving the way for German reunification.

Seeing the joy depicted in these expressions was an emotional experience for me. I imagined how my father, having grown up during the Cold War, would feel taking in the same scene.

Next year - 2009 - the history of the Berlin Wall and what it came to symbolize will be the cause of great celebration, when the 20th anniversary of its fall will be commemorated. Numerous events are being scheduled throughout Berlin and other German communities reflecting on that historic time.

During my recent tour of eastern Germany, a visit to the Wall was a fitting starting point for a trip that would take me to some of the cities that have played an important role in Germany's lengthy history.

One hour outside Berlin, in the suburb of Potsdam, is Schlosshotel Cecilienhof. A luxury hotel and museum today, Cecilienhof palace played an important role during World War II.

Constructed originally as a home for Prince Wilhelm, the site gained acclaim in the summer of 1945, when the leaders of the United Kingdom, Soviet Union and United States — Winston Churchill, Josef Stalin and Harry Truman - held meetings here in the aftermath of World War II, with discussions including how the city of Berlin would be divided.

While attending the Potsdam Conference, Churchill learned that he'd been voted out of office back in England. He was replaced at the meetings by his successor, Clement Attlee. Just prior to Potsdam, Truman received news of the successful test of the atomic bomb.

The stately hotel today offers 42 guestrooms, extensive grounds and a cozy restaurant, where my companions and I dined on apple strudel, sweet cabbage and, of course, the wurst sausages of Germany.

The estate's museum details events of the Potsdam Conference. In one of the courtyards, a large Russian star serves as the centerpiece for a unique garden.

Potsdam is also known for its many beautiful parks. Every spring the city hosts a tulip festival that draws visitors from around the world and features more than 150,000 flowers. You'd never know by looking today, but among the quaint buildings in town is one that once held a KGB prison.

About 125 miles south of Berlin, another city offering much for history buffs is Dresden. A few months before the Potsdam Conference, Dresden was heavily bombed by British and American fighter planes. The firestorm that ensued is estimated to have killed more than 25,000 people and destroyed much of the city.

"Dancing To Freedom" on the Berlin Wall.

In the six decades that have passed — and despite being under Communist rule until 1990 — Dresdeners have been busy rebuilding, literally brick by brick. And today the city — laid out in a perfect panorama along the Elbe — is once again absolutely beautiful.

Perhaps the most impressive of the reconstruction projects is the massive Church of Our Lady, or Frauenkirche. Built in the 1700s and boasting a dramatic baroque dome, the Lutheran church was destroyed in the bombing. In the 1990s, backed by an international fundraising effort, restoration began. And after 13 years of meticulous work, including the use of many of the original stones, the church reopened in 2005, just in time for the city's 800th anniversary the following year.

The church stands at one end of a busy pedestrian square amid cafes, boutiques and hotels. Nearby, both bland Communist period architecture and glorious 18th century royal architecture are in view.

The Elbe Valley around Dresden is home to many beautiful villas and gardens. In the town of Bad Muskau, Muskakuer Park was designed by nobleman Hermann Furst Von Puckler (1785-1871). A world traveler, he created a series of gardens with bucolic views and unusual landscapes including two sizable earthen pyramids. The property stretches across the nearby border into Poland.

On our way back to Berlin, my companions and I stopped at Glienicke Bridge. In 1962, American fighter pilot Francis Gary Powers — who had been shot down over Russia — was returned to the West here in exchange for Col. Rudolph Abel, a captured Russian spy.

Back in Berlin, we visited Checkpoint Charlie, where American soldiers once stood guard at the border between East and West. Displays tell the stories of residents of East Berlin who made daring attempts during the Communist era to escape to the West. Some created cars with the tops cut off so they could make it under a security gate. Others tunneled. Some made it safely across, but 171 people lost their lives trying to escape to freedom.

OBITUARY

Edward Bayley Long

Avid naturalist and photographer

Edward Bayley Long, an avid naturalist and photographer, died at his home on Sunday, Aug. 24, 2008 at the age of 87. His beloved wife and five children were with him at the time of his passing. He was cherished by them, as well as his grandchildren and friends, for his abiding sense of humor and adventure, his passion for the outdoors and the generosity of his spirit. He taught them all about loving and living.

Ed was born in 1920 in Boston and grew up on Beacon Hill and the Back Bay. He graduated from Milton Academy, where he rowed for the varsity team, a sport he would continue throughout his life. Later, he attended Harvard University.

After college he joined the Navy, serving as a mechanic of PBYs during WWII. He worked as a hydraulics specialist at the Fore River Shipyard in Quincy before entering a long, successful career as an investment broker. His achievements as a company vice president were recognized by Merrill Lynch with the creation of a Man of the Year award in his honor.

A philanthropist and fundraiser for numerous charitable causes, Ed was passionate about protection of the environment. He was a director of the Massachusetts Audubon Society, co-founder of the Cohasset Conservation Land Trust, and a member of the Trustees of Reservations.

He was instrumental in local campaigns to preserve open space, including World's End in Hingham, Bassing Beach in Cohasset and other nature preserves where he walked with his children and grandchildren, and always his dogs. He documented their beauty in his acclaimed photographs. His achievements as a nature photographer were recognized at a juried exhibition for the Massachusetts Audubon Society.

He leaves his wife, Priscilla Hastings Long; his five children, Edward Long Redpath, William Bowditch Long, Lydia Long, Diana Long Sweitzer and Andrew Hastings Long; and 11 grandchildren. A memorial service will be announced and held at a later date. In lieu of flowers, contributions in his name may be made to the Cohasset Conservation Land Trust, P.O. Box 314, Cohasset, 02025.

FOCUS ON HIGHER EDUCATION

College expanding its online horizons

Programs available for teachers, nutritionists; new nursing program

By Charlie Breitrose
DAILY NEWS STAFF

FRAMINGHAM – Teachers looking for training, others looking for a certificate in nutrition, and now nurses looking for a master's degree can all turn to Framingham State College.

Many courses offered to students who already have a bachelor's degree can be taken from the comfort of home through FSC's online programs, said Janet Castleman, dean of the graduate and continuing education program.

"We are seeing increases in the numbers of students taking online courses," Castleman said. "One of the reasons we are seeing increases in online education (is) because of (the) price of gas. The New York Times did a story about that recently."

Most of the online classes only require access to the Internet, so students need not ever step on campus. Castleman said students from far and wide have taken advantage of these computer-based offerings.

"We have had students in China, Iraq, Florida, Georgia and Western Massachusetts," Castleman said.

Framingham State offers 40 to 60 courses online each semester, said Robin Robinson, the director of distance education at FSC.

"The growth has been amazing," Robinson said. "The college has been doing it for 10 years. We will be having a celebration in November."

As a former teachers' college, Framingham State continues to provide many programs for educators, for both up-and-coming and established teachers. The college goes beyond education, and now has courses in 16 areas of study, Robinson said.

Teaching continues to be a good opportunity for career changers, Castleman said, and FSC provides courses for people to do so.

"The students tend to be older, who are kind of questioning what it's all about and want a change, or they have been successful and want to give something back," Castleman said. "The Post Baccalaureate Teacher Licensure program provides the education they need to get the initial teacher's license."

During the course, the students keep an e-portfolio – a collection of their work accessible by the Internet.

Some classes in the program can be taken online, but others must be taken in the classroom, Castleman said.

"A lot of them are face to face," Castleman said. "They have to do field experience in the schools."

One program that can be done 100 percent online, Robinson said, is the master's in curriculum instructional technology. It's aimed at teachers who want to use computers and other technology in their own classrooms.

"It helps them use technology in their instruction and developing their skills and resources," Robinson said.

During the course, the students keep an e-portfolio – a collection of their work accessible by the Internet.

"Not only are they getting a lot of information from wonderful faculty, but they're collecting it in a format they can share with others," Robinson said.

Another area of focus for online courses at Framingham State is nutrition, Robinson said.

"Nutrition is a good area for online," Robinson said. "We have some certificate programs."

While many classes are aimed at those who have already graduated, Robinson said the school also wants to provide courses for undergraduates.

"We have articulation agreements with the community colleges, so students can more easily come in and complete a liberal arts degree," Robinson said. "We have an initiative to expand the liberal arts online."

The college's newest program is aimed at teaching nurses to become nursing instructors.

"That will help address the nursing shortage," Castleman said. "It will put more nursing educators into programs teaching (people to become) nurses. That's where the bottleneck is."

The program, which already has 75 students enrolled, will have two tracks: nursing education and nursing leadership.

Charlie Breitrose can be reached at 508-626-3964 or cbreitro@cnc.com.

Students can now pursue many degrees from Framingham State College online.

SALOME'S STARS
FOR RELEASE WEEK OF
AUG. 25, 2008

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) Your honesty might upset some people, but you inevitably win more admirers for having the courage to tell the truth when others are more likely to scramble for cover.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) Your efforts to defend your project begin to show favorable results. You should soon be able to win over even the most determined detractors who had lined up against it.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) You win praise for your selfless efforts in a very difficult situation. But be careful not to allow your generous nature to be exploited by those who have their own agenda.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) A trusted colleague sheds light on a recent spate of puzzling workplace situations. This should give you the information you need to bring to your superior's attention.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) A shift in workplace management could be helpful for talented Leos and Leonas who have been waiting to have their accomplishments rewarded by receptive leadership.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) A misunderstanding between you and someone you care for should be corrected immediately. This relationship is too important to lose over a bruised ego.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) A welcome piece of good news helps clear the air in a family situation. A job-related incident also eases as more information provides a clearer focus on the problem.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) Quick action to heal bruised feelings pays off in a big way. Now you'll be able to move forward with your plans without that problem holding you back.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) Your creativity combined with a positive attitude should give you a considerable edge in finding a way to get around the negativity you've run into.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) That sudden streak of stubbornness could cause some problems. Try to be more open to helpful suggestions and more flexible in making needed changes.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) Now that that special relationship appears to be well and truly restored, you can spend more time dealing with those long-needed workplace changes.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) A new opportunity sounds promising. But watch out for any conditions that might be attached. Before making a decision, ask that each one be explained in detail.

Fun By The Numbers

Like puzzles? Then you'll love sudoku. This mind-bending puzzle will have you hooked from the moment you square off, so sharpen your pencil and put your sudoku savvy to the test!

Here's How It Works:

Sudoku puzzles are formatted as a 9x9 grid, broken down into nine 3x3 boxes. To solve a sudoku, the numbers 1 through 9 must fill each row, column and box. Each number can appear only once in each row, column and box. You can figure out the order in which the numbers will appear by using the numeric clues already provided in the boxes. The more numbers you name, the easier it gets to solve the puzzle!

What's happening on the South Shore

Vince Gill performs Aug. 30 at South Shore Music Circus in Cohasset.

Vince Gill leaves the band behind

It's simply about the music in Gill's acoustic concert

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

"I've always seen myself as a musician first. For me it's always been about the music, not about shtick. I like informality, because it allows things to be very natural."
Vince Gill

On a magical night in Cohasset some 25 years ago, a young bluegrass singer and songwriter took the stage of the South Shore Music Circus as the unbilled opening act for headliner Barbara Mandrell. Armed with only his guitar and a pure and powerful voice, Vince Gill made it clear, without ever having to say so, that he was a star on the rise. Gill – whose latest release, the four-CD set of new music "These Days," earned him his 19th Grammy Award earlier this year, this one for Best Country Album – returns to the Music Circus on Saturday with an acoustic show that just may remind some of that earlier summer night under the tent.

"We went out last year with a 17-piece band in support of 'These Days,' and we covered a wide range of music," Gill explained recently by telephone. "This year, I thought it might be good to go back a little bit as a storyteller and songwriter and kind of share how many of these songs came to be and then just see what happens. I wanted to do something very different than last year.

"It was a blast to have a 17-piece orchestra, but a lot of these songs were conceived this way with a smaller sound. I don't really have a plan, but I'm not worried because I'm bringing the best people with me – Pete Wasner on piano, Billy Thomas on percussion and Mike Bib on bass. And I'll play plenty of acoustic guitar and maybe some electric guitar. The environment of these shows will be smaller and more intimate, which will give me the chance to really interact with the audience."

It was while he was in the audience for a concert by another legendary singer that Gill got the idea for his current tour.

"Not too long ago, I saw James Taylor do a kind of one-man band show, with just him, a piano player and all those great songs. I really enjoyed watching it and I knew I would enjoy performing in that setting as well – just pared down and informal. I've always seen myself as a musician first, too. For me it's always been about the music, not about shtick. I like informality, because it allows things to be very natural."

It was Gill's natural talent as a singer that landed him a job with Pure Prairie League where his voice helped make "Let Me Love You Tonight" a hit. A solo career followed, first with RCA Records, and then with MCA Records where he earned his first Grammy Award for Best Country Male Performance for "Oklahoma Swing," a duet hit with Reba McEntire, from the album "When I Call Your Name." That album sold more than two million copies and led to six more million-selling studio albums with MCA and more than 20 Top 10 country hits.

The 51-year-old Oklahoma native, who once famously turned down an offer from Marc Knopfler to join Dire Straits, has often worked with other artists. In 1991, he earned his first CMA Vocal Event of the Year Award for his performance with Mark O'Connor and the New Nashville Cats (featuring Gill, Ricky Skaggs and Steve Wariner). In 1992 he released the quadruple-platinum-certified "I Still Believe In You." The title cut became Gill's first number one single, followed quickly by "Don't Let Our Love Start Slippin' Away." The album also featured the hits "One More Last Chance," "Tryin' to Get Over You" and "No Future in the Past." Gill also topped the charts with "The Heart Won't Lie," his second duet with McEntire, which was featured on her album "It's Your Call." Gill credits his willingness to share a recording studio with helping to win him some of his many awards including 18 Country Music Association (CMA) honors.

"The Grammy Awards are very much their own animal. I never thought I'd get the first one. By the time I was lucky enough to get my 19th from Ringo Starr, which was just amazing, I was asking myself, 'Will this be the last?' One of the reasons I have won so many is that I am a lot more willing to collaborate with the other artists which has allowed me to win in many different categories."

Two of Gill's collaborations have been decidedly personal. Following the 1998 end of Gill's 18-year first marriage to fellow country singer Janis Oliver of "Sweethearts of the Rodeo," with whom he has a 26-year-old daughter, Jennifer Gill, he married Christian/pop singer Amy Grant in March 2000. The couple has one daughter, seven-year-old Corinna Grant Gill.

The year they were married, Gill and Amy Grant released "Let's Make Sure We Kiss Goodbye." The album celebrated their relationship and featured the hit "Feels Like Love." Three years later, Gill released "Next Big Thing," his first solo-produced album, featuring the title cut and "Young Man's Town." In 2006, Gill released "These Days," a four-CD set featuring 43 new recordings. Each album in the set explored a different musical mood – traditional country, ballads, contemporary up-tempo, and acoustic/bluegrass music. The set features a variety of guest performers including John Anderson, Guy Clark, Sheryl Crow, Phil Everly, daughter Jenny Gill, wife Amy Grant, Emmylou Harris, Diana Krall, Michael McDonald, Bonnie Raitt, Leann Rimes, Gretchen Wilson, Lee Ann Womack, Trisha Yearwood and more.

The decision by Luke Lewis, head of Gill's label UMG Nashville, to release the four CDs as one boxed set is one Gill – who has sold more than 26 million albums in his career to date – credits with helping bring attention to his latest effort.

"If it had just been a record, it would have come and gone, and I'm not sure anybody would have raised an eyebrow toward it. But the uniqueness of releasing the four different new albums as one set created an awful lot of interest in it."

The interest resulted in sales of more than one million units, at a time when Gill was essentially being shut out by radio programmers in favor of newer artists.

"It baffles me, but at the same time it really doesn't surprise me," said Gill of the challenges he and other veteran country artists face getting their music played on the radio. The lack of radio play didn't harm the album, however, when it came time for awards season. The CD set won the 2008 Grammy for best country album and was also nominated for Album of the Year, which ultimately went to Herbie Hancock for "River: The Joni Letters."

"People who are really knocking it out of the park sales-wise in country music today would probably say that the Grammys are not really representative of what's going on in country music today," says Gill. "And I don't blame them for thinking that way, but at the same time, the Grammy Awards are not strictly about the Top 10. I am really proud of that album. And the fact that it was also nominated in the general category with Amy Winehouse, the Foo Fighters, and Herbie was a big thrill for me. It also created a level of interest in me that had never existed before and I'm very grateful for that."

Michael McGrath and Leslie Kritzer rehearse the famous card scene from "Born Yesterday," playing through Aug. 30 at the Cape Playhouse in Dennis.

'It's like a paid vacation'

Family time's a bonus during Michael McGrath's run on the Cape

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

Broadway performer Michael McGrath ("Monty Python's Spamalot") has spent a lot of time at his family's home in West Yarmouth this summer, but unlike most Cape visitors, rest and relaxation have not been on his agenda. McGrath is currently starring in "Born Yesterday" at the Cape Playhouse in Dennis, where he also appeared last month as Groucho Marx in "A Day in Hollywood/A Night in the Ukraine."

"Working on the Cape is fun. It's like having a paid vacation. I come out the stage door after the show every night and see people I haven't seen in 30 years, not to mention extended family members," McGrath said recently by telephone from New York. "My parents, Shirley and Pat McGrath, live in Worcester where I grew up, but spend summers at the 'McGrath Compound' in West Yarmouth. And my sister, Susan, and brother-in-law, Bob, live year-round in South Yarmouth."

In "Born Yesterday," the Garson Kanin comedy first produced on Broadway in 1946, McGrath plays Harry Brock, a short-on-manners, long-on-bluster business tycoon who brings his blonde bombshell girlfriend to Washington, D.C., where he hopes to buy himself a few Congressmen. Originated on Broadway by Paul Douglas, opposite Judy Holliday, the role was played most memorably by Broderick Crawford in a 1950 feature film adaptation which also starred Holliday, and by John Goodman in a forgettable 1993 remake with Melanie Griffith. A 1989 stage revival, which played Boston's Shubert Theatre prior to Broadway, starred Ed Asner and Madeline Kahn. Despite its various revivals and remakes, McGrath acknowledges knowing little of the story before Cape Playhouse Artistic Director Evans Haile cast him in Dennis

"I was not familiar with the show at all. When I told my wife they were interested in me, she immediately said 'For the Broderick Crawford role?' And I said, yeah, that's the part. It caught me off guard that my own wife would immediately think of me for this particular part since, in the very beginning of the play, the character is described as a big, dumb gorilla. I decided right then that I would play him as a not-so-big, dumb gorilla with plenty of style and attitude."

McGrath earned 2005 Tony and Drama Desk Award nominations for the role of Patsy in Spamalot, which he played on Broadway for over two years, and was also featured in the recent revivals of "Wonderful Town" with Donna Murphy, and "Little Me" with Martin Short. This past season, he appeared in the acclaimed but short-lived "Is He Dead?" opposite Norbert Leo Butz. McGrath spent 1985-88 in the now-closed Boston company of "Forbidden Broadway" at the Terrace Room in the Park Plaza Hotel. In the musical parody of all things Broadway, and all kinds of Broadway legends, McGrath played everyone from Richard Harris in "Camelot" and Kevin Kline in "The Pirates of Penzance" to Anthony Quinn as Zorba the Greek.

One of McGrath's co-stars, Toni DiBuono, went on to become his wife. McGrath and DiBuono have been married since 1993 and have a 13-year-old daughter, Kathleen.

He may have made his name in show business with musicals, but McGrath says he is ready to take his career in a new direction.

"I'm getting too old to do musicals," says the 50-year-old with a laugh. "I like to think of myself as an actor first, singer second, and dancer third."

Until this weekend anyway, McGrath is getting his wish and taking on a character like none he has played before.

"For Harry Brock, money talks. And Harry has a lot of money. He doesn't always do the right thing, but he's always ready to spend some money to get what he wants. It's a real departure for me and I'm having a blast."

Joining McGrath in Dennis is fellow Broadway performer Leslie Kritzer — seen this season in "A Catered Affair" and previously in "Legally Blonde: The Musical" and "Hairspray" — who plays the role of Billie Dawn, the businessman's mistress who falls for her tutor. Like McGrath, the 62-year-old "Born Yesterday" is all new to Kritzer.

"I didn't even know this character existed. Once I heard about this opportunity, I watched the Judy Holliday film, but only once as I didn't want to copy her work."

Kritzer, a performance artist known on the New York cabaret circuit for her impersonation of Broadway legend Patti Lupone, liked what she saw.

"Billie is a very playful person with a big heart. She's simple, for sure, but she is also very kind. She's always wearing minks, but she would be just as happy with an uncomplicated life. She's a very easy character to like."

Michael McGrath and Leslie Kritzer are starring in "Born Yesterday" at the Cape Playhouse, 820 Main St., Route 6A, Dennis, through Saturday, Aug. 30. For tickets and information, visit the box office, call 508-385-3911 or go online at capeplayhouse.com

A fresh start at the schools

Opening 'very smooth'

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

When the buses rolled in to the three schools on Tuesday, the administrations, teachers and staff stood at the ready to greet them, welcome them and begin the learning process right away.

"The first day of school is always a highlight; it never gets old. To see the enthusiasm of the children is fabulous. They get off the bus ready to show you their lost tooth or struggling to carry their heavy backpack," said Superintendent of Schools Denise Walsh.

On Tuesday, she visited each of the school buildings and at the School Committee meeting Wednesday night, Walsh said she was looking forward to welcoming the newest students in the Cohasset district when the kindergarteners arrived for their first day Thursday.

"Everything went very smooth," said Walsh.

The school administration has been hard at work this summer to complete hiring for numerous teaching positions. All open teaching positions have been filled and over a dozen new teachers are in the school district. The

Wilson House history paper

Grad student holds museum dear

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

For Laura Abrams, the Captain John Wilson House and the family that once lived there will always have a special place in her heart. That's because she has spent the better part of two years getting to know the Wilson family and their 19th-century life in Cohasset.

Abrams, who has served as the Wilson House's assistant curator, recently completed her thesis paper on the Cohasset Historical Society's museum. Following an extensive four-year restoration at the Wilson House, Abrams came on as a intern right at the time the historical society was ready to redesign the space.

With the help of the society's helping hands, she re-interpreted the museum and set up its current exhibits as part of her graduate work and thesis paper. Her thesis paper, "Context and the Captain John Wilson House: Rethinking Interpretive Strategies in the Historical House Museum," contains extensive research on historical house museums and explains her reasoning for her ultimate interpretation for the building and its exhibits.

"I was really lucky, the Historical Society gave me a lot of free reign to interpret the house, display the artifacts and tell the story there was to tell," said Abrams.

Abrams first came to the Cohasset Historical Society as part of her master's program in museum studies at the Harvard University extension school in 2004. After the internship, she con-

Wind hearing Monday

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Cohasset could be on its way to getting its two biggest fans — wind turbines, that is. This coming Monday, Sept. 8 at 8p.m., the Planning Board will begin what will likely be a series of public hearings on an application proposing two wind turbines on the Graham Waste site off Route 3A.

The project application, put forth by a private developer, proposes the installation of two 1.65-megawatt sized wind turbines.

The application is a landmark project as it is the first for the town and the first venture under the recently passed Wind Energy Conversion Facility bylaw. The bylaw, drafted with the help of the Alternative Energy Committee and sponsored by the Planning Board, establishes town-wide zoning regulations for commercial size wind turbines — turbines greater than 500-kilowatts, or about the size Hull Wind I located near Hull High School.

"On a grand scale I've got to say anything the town can do to make use of renewable energy is a good idea," said Planning Board member Charles Samuelson. "But, there are some obvious trade-offs." He named visual impacts as being one of them.

However, Chairman Al Moore is quick to point out that the public hearing process will not be a place for debate on whether wind turbines are good or bad.

"The opportunity to oppose wind turbines has come and gone," Moore said in a phone interview. With the unani-

New Cohasset Mariner 'drop box'

The Cohasset Mariner has a new "drop box" and pickup location at Tedeschi's in the village. The drop box is on the counter in the front window around the corner to the left after you enter the front door.

The Mariner picks up at 8 a.m. on Mondays and Tuesdays. The drop box can be used to drop off glossy photographs, letters, flyers or other editorial copy.

The Mariner thanks Bill Ducharme at Tedeschi's for agreeing to allow Tedeschi's be our new pickup location. For years the Mariner pickups were at Cohasset News, which is now a new dance studio. The Mariner thanks John and Larry Scott at Cohasset News for accepting Mariner items over many years. John and Larry are still at the Cohasset Butcher & Deli on Brook Street.

POLICE BEAT

Scituate teen speeds through Cohasset, careens across rotary

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Cohasset police will be seeking charges of speeding in violation of special regulation, failure to stop for a police officer, reckless operation and unlicensed operation against an 18-year-old Scituate teen who sped through Scituate and Cohasset before being involved in a single-car accident in Hingham on Saturday (Aug. 30) at 1:47 a.m.

Hingham Sgt. Steven Dearth, who had heard the police radio transmission from Cohasset, set up "stop sticks," which are tire deflation devices, on Summer Street before the rotary.

Chief James Hussey said the incident started in Scituate with reports of a speeding car. Cohasset police picked up the car by Stop and Shop. Cohasset police then told Hingham that the 2005 Chrysler Sebring turned right onto Summer Street from Route 3A (where the detour is set up).

Hingham Sgt. Steven Dearth, who had heard the police radio transmission from Cohasset, set up "stop sticks," which are tire deflation devices, on Summer Street before the rotary.

Dearth saw the car coming down the hill toward him without headlights traveling at about 70 mph. To avoid the stop sticks, the car went onto the wrong side of the road, slid across the grassy part of the rotary, slammed into the curb at Super Petroleum on the other side of the rotary and blew out its tires.

Justin D. Farias, 18, of 165 A Front St., Scituate, was transported to the Scituate Police Station where he is also facing charges.

Hingham police are summonsing Farias to court on the charges of operating to endanger, operating without a license, speeding, failure to stay within marked lanes, and operating without headlights.

MV crashes

• At 9:40 a.m. on Tuesday (Aug. 26) a 2004 Toyota, operated by a Randolph resident, was stopped in traffic on Chief Justice Cushing Highway near Pond Street; the 2008 Ford behind the Toyota, which was operated by a Duxbury resident, also stopped. But a 2005 Cadillac, driven by a Cohasset resident, was unable to stop, struck the rear of the Ford and pushed the Ford into the Toyota. The Cadillac and Ford were towed. All occupants were checked out at the scene and no one was transported to the hospital, police said. The driver of the Cadillac was cited for following too close.

• At 5:16 p.m. on Thursday (Aug. 28) in the northbound lane near the 400 block of Chief Justice Cushing Highway, a 2006 Chevrolet operated by a Pelham woman had slowed to a stop in heavy traffic; the 2001 Ford that was behind the Chevrolet and which was operated by a Cohasset resident also slowed. A 2003 Cadillac driven by a New Bedford woman behind the Ford, struck the rear of the Ford and pushed the Ford into the Chevrolet. The operator of the Cadillac was cited for following too close. The Cadillac and Ford needed to be towed. No one was transported to the hospital, police said.

• A 2006 Toyota, operated by a Cohasset resident, was traveling east near the 700-block of Jerusalem Road at 4:58 a.m. on Saturday (Aug. 30) when the car went off the road, struck a rock and hit a utility box, owned by National Grid. The driver admitted to being distracted and was cited for failure to stay in marked lanes, police said.

Picnic table

A concerned caller reported a group of kids in a black pickup truck removed the picnic table from Wheelwright Park and were entering the woods with it. Police responded and the teens came out of the woods and moved the picnic table back where it belonged. Police checked the area and did not find any alcohol. The incident was reported at 7:24 p.m. on Tuesday (Aug. 26).

Found wallet

At 11:15 a.m. on Monday (Aug. 25), a concerned citizen brought a wallet to the station that was found on Beechwood Street. The wallet belongs to a man from Auburndale and still had credit cards and cash inside. Police have contacted the wallet's owner.

MV stops

• A 21-year-old Scituate man, who was arrested on King Street (Route 3A), is facing drunk driving charges. Police said the pickup he was driving was headed north. A police officer in a cruiser observed the pickup cross the centerline and cross onto the wrong side of the road. The officer pulled the vehicle over by lower King Street and said the operator had alcohol on his breath. After further investigation, he was arrested and charged with OUI (alcohol), marked lanes violation and driving on a suspended license.

• An officer on bike patrol on Border Street noticed a vehicle parked on the side of the road with a brake light out. The officer could smell the odor of marijuana from the car and called for backup. The officers approached the vehicle, in which the operator and passenger were seated inside. The officers searched the vehicle and took the passenger, a 49-year-old Dorchester man, into custody. He was charged with possession of Class D (marijuana) and Class B (cocaine). The incident occurred at about 6 p.m. on Thursday (Aug. 28).

• Officers on patrol saw a Ford van fail to stop at the stop sign at the intersection of Shaw's Plaza and Route 3A at about 10:30 p.m., on Thursday (Aug. 28). The van was pulled over and police could smell marijuana from inside the vehicle. Further investigation led to the arrest of two Scituate men, ages 18 and 20, for possession of Class D (marijuana).

• A Cohasset woman who allegedly refused to stop for police after her motorcycle created a loud noise from its exhaust in the village was arrested for failure to stop for a police officer and marked lanes violation. At 5:14 p.m. on Friday (Aug. 29), an officer on foot patrol on South Main Street by Tedeschi's heard the loud exhaust as the motorcycle left a parking space. The officer tried to get the motorcycle to stop and saw it turn left onto Brook Street crossing over onto the wrong side of the road. A short time later a detail officer notified police that the motorcycle was stopped on Stockbridge Street and police responded to the area.

• A 39-year-old Quincy woman is being summonsed to court for operating on a suspended license following a traffic stop at Brook and Elm streets on Sunday (Aug. 31) at 3:51 p.m. Police said an officer saw the car and recognized the operator, who was known to him. The officer thought the woman's license had been suspended and that information was confirmed. Her car was towed.

Lost passport

A woman told police last week that her Italian passport was lost and she had to get back to her country within a week. Police referred her to the appropriate authorities.

False prescription

Police are summonsing a 40-year-old Mansfield man to court on charges of uttering a false prescription after investigation revealed he allegedly tried to obtain Oxycodone from Walgreen's using a forged prescription last Wednesday. A pharmacist notified Cohasset police about the suspicious prescription and police were able to identify the man.

Vandalism

Police were able to apprehend a group of kids who threw a rock at one house and broke the window to another house last week. Police notified the parents and talked with the victims. Restitution is being made, police said. No criminal charges are being sought.

Roofer

A Cohasset woman went to the police station last week to report that the $2,700 check she had made out to a roofer had been cashed. She said the roofer did not show up to do the work and she had not been able to contact him. Chief Hussey said the matter is under investigation.

Apology

Police said a person, who had been drinking and caused a disturbance in the early hours of Saturday morning (Aug. 30) later called back to apologize. The initial report from the Legion Hall was about a person who refused to leave. When police arrived the person had left and returned to the hotel where he was staying.

Fishing

On Monday (Aug. 25), a caller reported men were wading in Lily Pond without proper safety gear. The officer responded and told them they had to fish from shore.

Homeless man

Police provided a homeless man with a ride to the train station following complaints that he was walking in a parking lot off Route 3A asking people for rides last Tuesday (Aug. 26).

Open Meeting Law meeting planned

The Open Meeting Law is written to protect the openness of government. At the request of the Board of Selectmen, an Assistant District Attorney for Norfolk County will present an Open Meeting Law seminar on Thursday, Sept. 18 at 7p.m. The meeting will be held in the basement hearing room at Town Hall. The meeting will be an opportunity to review the statute and to clarify any questions or concerns the audience has to ensure that all boards, commission and committees remain in full compliance with the Open Meeting Law.

The Board of Selectmen is strongly encouraging each and every town board, commission and committee to send at least one representative to the session, according to memo distributed by the Town Manager. Department heads who work with multi-member boards are also encouraged to attend.

Planning Board to review proposed turbine plans

mous passage of the wind bylaw at the Annual Town Meeting earlier this year, the Planning Board is responsible for ensuring the project adheres to the regulations. "The Planning Board as a quasi-judicial board and is not here to make a subjective decision on wind turbines."

Samuelson agrees, "our role is to determine if the project meets the requirements set down at Town Meeting."

Moore said he would welcome resident participation, but not allow the discussion to be steered from the task at hand — determining whether the project conforms with the zoning bylaws.

The private project on the Graham Waste Services site is a joint venture between CCI-Energy, Palmer Capital, Lumus Construction and Emergent Energy. Graham Waste business and landowner, Paul Barry, has leased the land to the developers. The developers have been working on the project for two-plus years.

Jim Sweeney of CCI-Energy, the turbine developer, is looking forward to getting in front of the Planning Board.

"It is going to be exciting for us and for the town," said Sweeney. "From almost everybody we've talked to we have received a favorable response…so far, I don't think anybody is going to fight (the project)."

"The Planning Board as a quasi-judicial board and is not here to make a subjective decision on wind turbines."
— Al Moore, Planning Board

However, Sweeney has met with the Avalon apartment complex developers to go over the project plans. When the 200-unit Avalon apartment complex is built off Route 3A some of the units could be as close as 500 feet from one of the turbines, Sweeney said. It is the only potential abutting residential development.

Sweeney knows the Planning Board and residents will have plenty of questions, something he welcomes with open arms.

"It is the right thing to do — get all the facts and from there make a decision," said Sweeney.

The twin turbines will have towers 100 meters high and each of the blades is 41-meters long, making the entire structure extend 141 meters into the air. The turbines will be structurally larger than the 60-meter Hull Wind II located on their capped landfill on the Weir River, but Hull Wind II's siting gives it additional height. The turbines will be set about 500 feet apart on either side of the capped landfill.

If constructed the turbines hold the possibility of providing as much as (or more than) two-thirds of the town's energy. The developer, CCI-Energy, is currently working with the Alternative Energy Committee on a contract to sell the excess energy generated by the turbines to the town at a discounted rate.

The public hearings, essentially a site plan review for the project, will include an in-depth look at all aspects of the project and its potential impacts. The application includes a 70-page feasibility study, which outlines the project from a wind analysis to potential noise, shadow flicker, visual and avian impacts to estimated energy outputs.

Moore expects the public hearings to last at least two sessions to allow for resident participation and to ensure all questions are adequately addressed. The process will be much like a site plan review for a commercial development and in many ways will be a little simpler, said Moore. For example, a proposal when the Dunkin' Donuts was proposed on Route 3A in the former Koko Island building, a thorough traffic study needed to be done. The turbines will have little implications for traffic on Route 3A.

The town's engineer consultant John Modelewski will be analyzing the plans as well to ensure they are technically sound.

One of Samuelson's questions and concerns is the future of the turbine. How will it be maintained? What happens when its useful life is complete?

"I want to be sure there is a process and funding in place for the maintenance of the turbine," said Samuelson, adding he wants to know what the plan is for dismantling the turbine when it no longer is efficient.

"It is a first so we will be doing a thorough site plan, covering all the bases and we'll see how it goes," said Moore.

The wind turbine application is available at the Planning Board office on the first floor of Town Hall. The public hearing will begin at 8p.m. on Monday, Sept. 8.

Supt. of Schools Walsh gets positive review

With another year behind and another to look forward to, the School Committee gave Superintendent of Schools Denise Walsh a positive performance review. Each School Committee member completed a review of the Walsh for the last year and Chairman Rick Flynn compiled a brief synopsis of the review that he read at the School Committee meeting.

Walsh met or exceeded expectations for the School Committee. Flynn noted Walsh's work on the fiscal 2009 budget, which included many "operational efficiencies" to get more for every budget dollar.

"There is a strong sense our business house is in very good order," said Flynn, adding the schools have made a lot of progress under Walsh's direction.

Flynn noted if there was a weakness in Walsh's performance it was "effective relationship with the community." He said the School Committee looked forward to helping Walsh improve relationships with various constituencies in the town over the next year.

Vice Chairman Steve Fusco said the most recent budget was something he was very proud of, "it was easy to understand and transparent…a significant improvement and people need to understand that."

Adrienne MacCarthy said she has reflected back on how far the schools have come over the past few years.

"There are a lot of new families and they don't realize how far we've come as a school district," said MacCarthy. She wanted residents to realize the School Committee is "secure in the leadership that's here."

Walsh thanked the committee for their feedback, "it is very helpful for me. It keeps me focused."

"We have nothing to hide and a lot to be proud of," said Flynn.

Civil War Camp meeting is Sept. 18

Sons of Union Veterans of the Civil War Satuit Camp 3188 is having an organizational meeting at 7 p.m., Thursday (Sept. 18) at GAR Hall on Country Way in Scituate.

The Sons of Unions Veterans of the Civil War (SUVCW) is a patriotic and educational organization.

Membership is open to males, ages 14 and older, who are direct descendants of a solider, sailor, or Marine who served during the Civil War. Junior and associate memberships are also available.

The camp will help prospective members with the paperwork to determine eligibility. Members do not have to be Scituate residents.

For information contact Conley Ford at cfordcon@comcast.net or call 781-545-0054.

'Apples' focus of program

The Community Garden Club of Cohasset will meet at 9 a.m. on Tuesday Sept. 23 in Bates Hall, Second Congregational Church, Highland Avenue. The public is invited to attend free of charge.

The speaker will be Nancy Hubert and the program is called APPLES, APPLES, APPLES. With slides, anecdotes and recipes, Nancy will provide an overview of the natural, social, and economic history of the apple. The program reflects her interest in the preservation of historic landscapes - in this case the apple orchard.

If you have an interest in the club and its activities or just an interest in this program, please attend.

Online bill payments for schools

The online payment option can be used to pay athletic fees, bus and parking fees, kindergarten and pre-school tuition and pre-pay lunch cards.

In an effort to make life easier for parents, the Cohasset Schools are unveiling a new way to pay for school related expenses via the internet.

The system is not up and running yet, but school officials anticipate the system will be available in two to three weeks. The online payment option can be used to pay athletic fees, bus and parking fees, kindergarten and pre-school tuition and pre-pay lunch cards.

Once it is up and running, parents can log on to the school website (www.cohassetk12.org) and pay by electronic check or credit card. The schools will send out a notice when the website is ready to go.

The School Committee responded to this new option with enthusiasm.

"It's really convenient," said member Lucia Flibotte, adding parents can pre-pay lunches and the child can always have it in case they forget their lunch or a busy morning prevents the making of a bag lunch. "Parent won't have to be looking for cash in the morning."

School business manager Dave DeGennaro said the online payment could help speed up the lunch lines at all three schools.

The town uses a similar technology for online payment of property taxes and water/sewer bills.

A fresh start at schools

schools are in the final stages of hiring a school nurse for Osgood and an adjustment counselor. Both of those positions were vacated in the mid-summer.

All the School Committee members recognized and thanked the teachers, staff and custodians for their work in making the school buildings look great for the opening of school.

"We have spiffy schools, the grounds looked really nice…you could tell they really hustled to make it look great," said School Committee member Adrienne MacCarthy.

Member Lucia Flibotte welcomed back students and parents to another school year. She asked parents to be especially patient and courteous to the school bus drivers as they learned their routes.

Final attendance numbers were still coming in as of the Wednesday night School Committee meeting, but Walsh said the numbers overall were fairly steady. Each of the high school grades has just about 100 students and she was expecting a fairly large (by Cohasset standards) incoming kindergarten class of 140.

Students at Deer Hill School empty off Bus #6 on Tuesday morning, the first day of the 2008-2009 school year.

Among the things Walsh is most excited about for the 2008-2009 school year is the new Primary Learning Center based at the Osgood School. The Primary Learning Center is devoted to four severely special needs students. Without the Learning Center the children would have to attend school out-of-district.

"The parents of those children are very excited. Now their kids are in the neighborhood school close by and with their friends," said Walsh.

Despite the excitement of school opening, Walsh and her administrative team are already looking ahead to next year's budget and what they can do better in the years to come. A budget calendar will be unveiled at the next School Committee meeting on Wednesday, Sept. 17.

"Education is the only business where you can start new every year and plan ahead each year," said Walsh.

SCHOOL YEAR

Cohasset has met the new school year and the almost official start of Fall with smiles and wonderful weather. Make sure to keep a watch on the rides in the mornings and afternoons as the kiddos are walking or riding to and from school. I cannot believe how big and grown up all of the kids seem to be, time keeps flying by and it is so important for us all to notice and remember all the small things that happen each day. The comments that they say, the accomplishments that are achieved after practice, tears and smiles and more memorable are the smiles that are given so freely. Send me in any fun stories or photos that you may have from the summer or, the first days of school.

GIFTWRAP

Guess what Cohasset, we have Monkeys, Monkeys, Monkeys....Look for the colorful, cute monkeys that will be dropping in at the Osgood and Deer Hill Schools next week. The PSO's fall fundraiser with Innisbrook Giftwrap swings into full gear next Wednesday with no monkeying around. You'll go bananas for the wonderful new fall Innisbrook Collection. Grad student writes thesis on Wilson House tinued at the historical society in a part-time capacity..

"I wanted to work with a historical society or a small historical museum. With a smaller organization, there is a lot to do and you get to get into a lot of different things," said Abrams. She did a lot of hands-on with the collection from cataloging to database to putting together the Wilson House exhibits.

The result was a complete interior transformation of the Wilson House to coincide with its structural restoration.

Abrams researched other historical house models and found they fell into one of three categories. Some houses were historically significant because someone famous had lived there, some had unique architectural value and others were simply representative of a specific time period.

"The Wilson House didn't specifically fit into any of those categories," said Abrams. Captain Wilson may have been a great man in Cohasset history, but he was not a broadly influential figure like John Adams or George Washington. There were some interesting architectural features like the original windowpanes. Most of all, the Wilson House could have a lot of representative value, especially after its complete historical restoration.

Laura Abrams carefully puts back a glass bottle after assigning it a number.

Laura Abrams is reflected in the glass of the frame holding the deed for $479 for the Captain John Wilson House, left, and the deed for additional land surrounding the house for $95 that dates back to 1817.

Volunteers needed

Love history? Love Cohasset? Then the Cohasset Historical Society could use your help. The active historical society is always in need of a helping hand with its extensive collections and archives, ongoing exhibits and village museums. Call the Historical Society at 781-383-1434 for more information.

In the end, Abrams and the Historical Society decided to create something like a hybrid museum. The first floor tells the story, or at least what is known of the story, of the Captain John Wilson family and the second floor is interpreted as a typical 19th-century home.

A total of 25 Wilson family objects offer a sketch of what life was like for Captain Wilson, his wife and his nine children. The first floor, once a ship's chandlery, is devoted to the life and objects of the Wilson family and how this one family fit in to the larger fabric of 19th-century Cohasset.

Captain Wilson's maritime tools represent a booming fishing trade; Cohasset was one of the largest in Massachusetts during its heyday. A display case houses a British Marine's cutlass that was mistakenly left on Captain Wilson's ship when the British boarded it during the War of 1812. A letter from an Army Corps of Engineers captain, William Swift, concerns the precarious structure of the original Minot Light. A small section is dedicated to the second and third generations of the Wilson family who also lived at 4 Elm Street. Then, a small table shows the many faces of the Wilson house — a teahouse, a photographer's studio, a tailors shop, a candy store and an ice cream parlor.

Laura Abrams measures out the height of the display case for the British cutlass while keeping track of the items at the Capt. John Wilson House.

"It is a way to tell about nineteenth century Cohasset — to humanize it," said Abrams. Some of the most memorable objects are the Wilson family Bible and church tax receipts found by pure chance on eBay.

On the second floor, the house has been interpreted as a typical early 19th-century home. What was once a "catch all" for historic household objects, said Abrams, has been redesigned to incorporate pieces dated from 1810 to 1860.

A children's room, a kitchen, a sitting room and a tiny "master suite" all feature period objects gleaned from the Historical Society's vast collections. Although none of the second floor objects are linked to Captain Wilson and his family, all illustrate a life the life they (and other Cohasset families) lived.

Each room is set up as if the occupants just stepped out of the room. In the kitchen the ingredients and tools used to make an apple pie lay on the counters and in the sitting room a book is left open to a page.

"It's a way for people to see how people lived in the 19th century," said Abrams. One central panel in each room briefly explains the use of the room and draws visitors' attention to the unique objects. Yet, she decided to keep the labels to a minimum to not detract from the lived-in feel of the house. Visitors can figure out for themselves what the objects were used for in daily life. Where possible, Abrams tried to make connections between 19th-century life and modern life to show not all has changed.

"In the sitting room, the panel explains how neighbors used to stop by to visit and that was how they got news and related to each other. Then, we compared that to how we relate today through telephone and internet," said Abrams. "(The interpretation of the museum) is a way to realize life isn't really all that different…The principles are still the same."

Even with Abrams thorough research of the Wilson family and their context in the greater scheme of Cohasset, there are still some outstanding questions for her that may never be answered. Why did Wilson live in such a modest home, cramped with nine children, when the fishing industry was booming? Why did an Army Corps of Engineers captain write to Wilson about his concerns of the original Minot Lighthouse? Did he take any action? Curious still is there is little known about Captain Wilson's wife who was left for likely months at a time while Wilson embarked on long fishing expeditions. These are just some of the mysteries left for Abrams and the Society to uncover.

"It's a project I hope continues to evolve. We'll always be looking for new clues," said Abrams, adding if you ignore the fact there's more out there, you miss a big part of the story. For her, the Wilsons will always be a part of her even if she isn't always in Cohasset.

"Certainly, I want to keep telling the story of the Wilsons," she said.

The Captain John Wilson House is open to the public during the summer months and by appointment. The nearby Maritime Museum (next door to the Wilson House) is open the same hours. Admission is free, but donations are always welcome. For more information, visit www.cohassethistoricalsociety.org or call 781-383-1434.

Coleman Nee named Democrat of the Year

Cohasset Democratic Town Committee has selected Coleman Nee as Democrat of the Year for 2008.

Nee is a longtime member, and former officer, of the committee and serves as Undersecretary of the Massachusetts Department of Veteran Services under Governor Deval Patrick and Lt. Governor Tim Murray. In this role, he helps oversee an agency that is recognized as one of the leading state veterans' departments in the nation, advocating for more than 400,000 Commonwealth's veterans and helping them attain the services and benefits they have earned through their service.

Over the course of his tenure as Undersecretary, Nee has managed a number of new outreach efforts, including the implementation of the Statewide Advocacy for Veterans Empowerment program.

Over the course of his tenure as Undersecretary, Nee has managed a number of new outreach efforts, including the implementation of the Statewide Advocacy for Veterans Empowerment program. This program reaches out to all veterans, especially the more than 30,000 new veterans in the Commonwealth since Sept. 11, 2001. Its goal is to reduce suicide and mental health issues among veterans by reaching out through a peer-to-peer effort through a team of recently returned veterans or family members. It is becoming recognized as a national model for suicide prevention and outreach to returning troops. Nee also works closely with numerous other state agencies to connect veterans and families to everything from financial and medical assistance to job training and housing support.

"Being named Democrat of the Year is a tremendous honor," said Nee. "There are many active, dedicated and hard working in Democrats in Cohasset and I accept this award on behalf of all of us who believe in working to make our community, Commonwealth and country a better place for everyone."

Nee and his three siblings were born and raised in South Boston by parents Martin and Mary Nee. He is the grandson of Irish immigrants who came to this country in the early 1900s looking for opportunity in America. His father is an Army veteran of World War II, serving in the Pacific Theatre and, upon leaving the service, spent the next 40 years working for the old Boston Edison and as a superintendent for the City of Boston. Talking about his early involvement in the Democratic Party, Nee credits the experiences of his parents and grandparents as his inspiration. "My father was the hardest working person I have ever known," he said. "He instilled in me pride for my hometown, my country, my family and to never forget how fortunate I was to be able to attend college and achieve my goals. My parents were children of the Depression. They never forgot that it was a man named Franklin Delano Roosevelt who recognized that government can and should play an important role in helping people improve their lives and helped set this country on the path to prosperity. This spirit is what enabled my parents to be able to buy a home, raise a family, have decent health insurance and educate their children."

When Nee was a senior at BC High, he enlisted in the delayed entry program of the United States Marine Corps and, after a time of active duty, transferred to the Marine Reserves while attending college at American University. Prior to graduating, he was activated for Operation Desert Storm and served with the 2nd Marine Division in Saudi Arabia and Kuwait. "I wanted to be a Marine all my life, ever since I first saw a recruitment brochure with a Marine in Dress Blues that was mailed to my older brother. South Boston is also legendary for having the most Marine enlistments for a community its size than anywhere else in America. It was a life changing decision when I boarded that bus for Parris Island, but I loved serving in the Corps and I will always be proud of my service."

Coming back from the war, Nee started on a career in public relations and government affairs. He also became active again in Democratic campaigns of all levels. "My first foray in politics was going up and down the streets of Southie and Dorchester when I was 12 years old dropping literature on doorsteps for Ray Flynn's first campaign for mayor of Boston. Since then I have been everything from a phone volunteer to a campaign manager. My parents believed deeply in the virtue of public service and being part of the democratic process. Sitting on the sidelines was not an option."

Twelve years ago, Nee moved from South Boston to Cohasset with his wife, Karyn. They were drawn by just how close knit this community is and how active its residents are in its schools and civic process. Today, they have two children, Jack and Kate, and Nee is still active in the Democratic Town Committee, civic affairs and the drive for veterans' rights.

"Regardless of how people feel about this war or any conflict, we all agree that the men and women who serve this country deserve to be taken care of when they return. I have been to all three veteran cemeteries in Massachusetts, as well as Arlington National Cemetery in Virginia. Nowhere on those headstones does it say 'Democrat,' 'Republican' or any other party. We are all Americans and we all have a responsibility to each other as neighbors, citizens and patriots."

Coleman Nee will be honored at a dinner sponsored by the South Shore Democratic Caucus to celebrate each of the individuals named in their town as Democrat of the Year. The event will take place on Friday, Sept. 12, at the Radisson Hotel in Rockland. For more information, contact Kevin McCarthy, chairman of the Democratic Town Committee, at kemccar68@comcast.net.

Backpack 2008

As you start off to classes this fall, what's in your backpack?

What are you bringing to school with you?

Lunch, CDs, pens, pencils, an assignment notebook, a ruler, maybe an iPOD?

These are some of the must-haves for a backpack, but there are some other things to pack inside that are even more important.

Tucked away in there, maybe there's some school spirit. Schools, like people, tend to live up to expectations. Your team, your club, your pals will all do better when you cheer them on. School spirit pulls everyone together.

Be sure to also pack the desire to do your best — academically, artistically, athletically, whatever is your strong suit. Even in 2008, it's still politically correct to carry with you a desire to succeed. At times it may seem there are barriers thrusting up in your way that make it hard to think in terms of succeeding. What can help then is to refocus on your goal. As the adage goes, "Barriers are what you see when you take your eyes off your goal."

Crammed inside the walls of vinyl, straps, and zippers should also be all the knowledge you gained over past school years. This information makes up the foundation for what you will learn in the months ahead.

This backpack is getting heavy. Remember you're not carrying it alone. Be aware there are people at school who are not only really ready and capable of helping you bear the weight, but who want to help you. That includes teachers, counselors, coaches, and peer advisors. That's what they're there for.

Sometimes hidden away in a backpack's zippered compartment are troubles. Sadness or anger at home. Money worries. Health issues. You can turn to your school counselor with these issues as well.

Maybe you're facing peer pressure from kids who are supposed to be your friends who are pushing you to do something you know you're not supposed to. Maybe you need to talk to a school counselor, or join a club or get an after school job where you can make new friends. Real friends do not get friends in trouble.

And real friends stand by you. In the words of legendary newscaster Walter Winchell, "A friend is one who walks in when the rest of the world walks out."

Each grade has its challenges.

Remember your first day of school ever? This is a child's first step in learning confidence that he or she can learn.

One older student we know recalled a kindergarten Halloween candy hunt as a landmark confidence-building event. The teacher had hidden small packets of candy around the room, and all the kids were supposed to hunt until they found a packet. She remembers feeling anxious she wouldn't be able to find any candy. Then she looked inside a dolly stroller and saw the prize. She remembers sitting back down at her desk, munching the treat and feeling proud, thinking, "I can do it."

How important was this moment? Pretty important, considering that this student, who went on to graduate from college, have a career, and raise a family, is now in her 60s.

School, and life itself, are built upon countless little moments such as these.

This is why early school experiences are so crucial to a child later in life. It is these experiences that form a child's self-image and set the stage for the child to learn or to fail to learn.

This is why early intervention is so important. Early intervention is a safety net that can catch a student and provide the support and tools needed for a successful academic journey.

And this is a really incredible journey.

The first day of school is one we hope students look forward to. It is a day parents both look forward to and look back upon, to their own days of "reading, writing, and 'rithmatic."

This is a journey that starts anew for every student every school year. Each time a student starts a new school year, whether at the elementary level or the upper grades, it is the first day of school, because so many things are new: new teachers, new subjects, new challenges.

The challenges will be easier to rise up to when you carry with you the right tools. And these tools are what belong in your backpack for the coming school year.

There is one more must-have for your backpack: a positive attitude.

Attitude is everything.

Attitude is more important than facts, because attitude changes facts.

So, welcome back to school.

Pack that backpack carefully.

Go for the gold.

Plan to make this your best year ever.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Welfare of dogs a concern

TO THE EDITOR:

I was reading the police report online and noticed the following entry:

• 8/17 3:57 p.m. Mendel Rd., animal complaint, caller reports she found a puppy in the woods at her house. Caller was instructed to let the puppy go.

I am completely shocked that our police department would suggest letting the puppy go. Couldn't they call an animal control officer? Couldn't they call a local shelter? Or maybe go the extra mile and pick up the dog? How can they care so little about the welfare of this lost dog to suggest just letting them go?

A friend of mine informed me that she found the same dog in her yard at her home on 3A on Saturday the 23rd. She called Cohasset Police and the dispatcher suggested that she just let the dog go. She informed them that she lived on a busy street and didn't think that was a good idea. They offered her no alternative. She tied the dog up outside and then called the number on the dog's tags. When she came back out, the dog was gone. A few days later she received a call from the owner saying she was away and left the dog with a family friend in Cohasset. That friend unfortunately lost the dog. As of last Monday, the dog was yet to be found. The dog is a chocolate lab and answers to the name Molly.

Is this our town's policy? If you find a dog, just let him go, he/she will probably find their way home? Maybe I don't have all the information, but I hope that in the future, the police department has a new procedure that puts the welfare of the dog first.

Punitive abatement of noise pollution

TO THE EDITOR:

What should be done to punish motorcyclists who disturb the peace by blatt blatt blatting their way through our streets, making as much noise as they can?

Maybe confining them to a room with poor acoustics and continuous chamber music? Or confined with recorded sound of leaf blowers, full volume? Or for those not blessed with some Scottish ancestry, confined in a room with more than two bagpipers?

One can sympathize with their childish need to call attention to themselves, while dismissing the silly argument that all that noise is necessary to protect themselves from motorists who otherwise might not notice them.

But why do we have to endure this racket, or the penetrating drone of leaf blowers? What can't easily be collected with a spring rake can stay there without harm. For someone to blow away for several minutes at a few leaves under a bush, instead of instantly capturing them with a rake, seems absurd, and absurdly costly to the homeowner. And if a few leaves aren't captured, does it really matter?

But at least leaf blowing is an attempt, however inefficient, at being useful. Roaming around on a motorcycle making noise as if to say "Hey, everybody look at me" contributes even less to the nation's GDP.

Not leaping on 'green bandwagon'

COMMENTARY

MARCI COMEAU

Our beautiful coastal town, which goes to great lengths to preserve its historical and small-town aesthetics, will forever possess a skyline dramatically altered with two hulking industrial size turbines.

The privately funded wind turbine project taking shape on the Graham Waste site will likely be a lucrative project over the long term, placing its private backers firmly in the black. As residents of our town we should be asking ourselves, what are the true benefits of the project to the town? On the surface it seems that generating clean, green, renewable energy is an admirable, socially responsible thing to do. So why shouldn't the town of Cohasset jump on the green bandwagon and proceed with the project? In fact, you might be surprised to learn that there are compelling reasons to oppose this pair of turbines.

After attending meetings and having discussions with the project consultants, several concerns for our town have surfaced. While it's true the Graham Waste turbines will utilize our plentiful wind resource to generate electricity without generating carbon emissions, it's the project's private financial backers who will primarily benefit monetarily from the project. As it stands now our town public buildings are not guaranteed to receive the benefit of discounted power rates. Unlike Hull, the residents of our town are not expected to see any financial benefit at the household level. In fact, beyond an unquantified amount of potential tax revenue, the town is not guaranteed to benefit financially at all.

Our beautiful coastal town, which goes to great lengths to preserve its historical and small-town aesthetics, will forever possess a skyline dramatically altered with two hulking industrial size turbines. Far greater in size than your average water and cell towers, the proposed turbines reach 140 meters (approximately 460 feet) into the air – 40 percent taller than the tallest of the Hull turbines. (By contrast, the Statue of Liberty is only 305 feet tall). In fact, the height of each turbine is the equivalent of planting two 747s, one on top of the other, vertically. The proposed turbine locations are both in close proximity to Route 3A and would be placed at a high elevation. The installations will be clearly visible by all Cohasset residents who traverse nearby

Drainage, rain gardens and Greenbush

Hoe ram hard at work.

Pond – Spring Street rain garden.

New bridge on Country Way over Bound Brook.

Exit from town lot after regrading.

Little Harbor Project – Several weeks ago we showed a photo of a new drainage project being constructed on Haystack Lane. You may recall that the purpose of this drain is to carry surface water from Deep Run to the ocean. Well the digging for this line has progressed to Jerusalem Road proper. As you can tell from the photo the ditch is quite deep at this location, being about 9 feet below the road surface. The drainpipe is barely visible in the lower right hand corner of the photo. To give you a sense of scale this pipe is 2 feet wide on its inside and, of course, a bit larger on the outside. The machine you see with its nose down in the ditch is a hoe ram, happily (and noisily) removing some good old Cohasset granite from the pipe's path. From this location, the pipe will run across the back of the property belonging to the Sisters of St. Joseph on its way to the Atlantic Ocean.

Cushing St., Norfolk Rd., & Pond St. Rain Gardens – The rain gardens near Norfolk and Cushing roads are waiting for their plantings and an authorization for some additional work that was found to be necessary. In the meantime, work has begun at the Pond St. — Spring St. site near the large rock at the intersection.

There are two natural water treatment areas here. The one in the foreground flows to the one in the background where the worker is leveling the bottom material. By the way, in a prior article we said that this project is the result of a grant from a state agency, Coastal Zone Management. But, we'd like to add that the grant funds are also being combined with funds from Cohasset's Community Preservation Committee as authorized by Town Meeting. So, this is actually a project jointly funded by the Town and the Commonwealth.

Greenbush Project – The Greenbush project continues with work in Cohasset. This past week, the Town Parking lot was closed on Wednesday so that low spots in the paving could be ground down to prepare for repaving them. This will help to correct the drainage.

The photo shows one of the areas where the asphalt has been removed in the "Exit" driveway. (Or at least it was the "exit" driveway until all the signs mysteriously disappeared.) Next Monday, the island to the right, will have a catch basin added to it to catch storm water from this part of the parking lot. So, this will involve some localized excavation. On Monday, Sept. 8 the area around the island will be closed for this construction. Next Tuesday, the Town Parking Lot will again be closed to pave the areas that are now roughened up. If you drive through the lot in the meantime, please be careful — there are a few sharp drop-offs where the pavement has been removed.

Lastly, we snuck down to Scituate and snapped a photo of the construction of the new bridge that will carry Bound Brook under Country Way. We thought you might like to see what's happening there.

Mutts of the world, unite

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

As anyone who has ventured within earshot of our house these days has learned, we have a dog whose timidity is well-hidden behind her bluster. We call her Jedi. That "Beware of Dog" sign is only to make her feel good about herself.

Jedi is a young lady of, shall we say, uncertain parentage. The guy we got her from insisted she is mostly husky but friends who know dogs say they have seen a little Lab, German shepherd, beagle and maybe even a little rottweiler in her.

...the North Shore Animal League of America in Port Washington, N.Y., is organizing the American Mutt-i-grees Club just for dogs and people like Jedi and me.

Every now and then, though I try to discourage it, at a cocktail party, one dog owner will spot me for another one and pleasure is placed on hold while he regales me with tales of how his Lhasa apso was cozened out of a blue ribbon at the last dog show.

"What kind of a dog is Jedi," he'll ask in his most condescending manner.

"She's a (mumble)," I'll say.

"I beg your pardon?"

"She's a (mumble)."

"What?"

"She's a mutt!"

There I said it. Jedi's a mutt ... a mongrel ... a cur, not fit to associate with Lhasa apsos and other kinds of girlie dogs, as Arnold would call them, just as her owner is not fit to associate with owners whose pets lost their ribbons in overtime.

You can imagine how thrilled I was the other day when I discovered that the North Shore Animal League of America in Port Washington, N.Y., is organizing the American Mutt-i-grees Club just for dogs and people like Jedi and me.

There are, according to the researches of J. John Stevenson, managing director of NSALA Pet Savers Foundation, no less than 25 million of us who own mutts — or mixed breed dogs, as Stevenson calls them — and the Mutt-i-grees Club plans to send each one a certificate, just like the Lhasa apsos.

"People are incredibly proud of their mixed breeds," said Stevenson, "and the time is ripe for there to be a way for them to communicate, share ideas and celebrate their choice."

Actually, Jedi was not our choice, but she was within our price range. All her previous owner asked was that we take her off his hands as quickly as possible because he had a bunch more coming along, the products of some canine trysts in the junkyard at midnight.

The Mutt-i-grees folks expect that 250,000 mutt-owners will sign up in the next year. One membership program is free and will get you advice and discussion. The $25 and $100 memberships will get you discounts on merchandise.

I'm not sure whether or not Jedi and I will sign up, although the prospect of discounted Alpo is tempting. Have you seen the cost of dog food lately?

But if the Mutt-i-grees can promise me a "mutt show" every year, you can just hand me a pen and show me the dotted line.

Then, when I meet Lhasa apso owners at cocktail parties, I can tell them how Jedi was cheated out of that blue ribbon at the last mutt show.

HEALTH NOTES

Avoid fatty, processed foods

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Junk food contains high levels of refined sugar, white flour, trans fat and polyunsaturated fat, salt, and numerous food additives such as monosodium glutamate and tartrazine...

Now that the school year is started, it's time for the Board of Health to rail against the way some of us eat. It's well known that obesity is a national threat and the increase in cases of diabetes is only one of the symptoms. In Cohasset generally, the there is little evidence of a problem since the schools have generally cleared the vending machines of the most egregious offenders. Nevertheless, there is constant pressure from advertising and marketing and far too many potato chips and Chito's are consumed. There's even a web page listing the sources for different categories of the stuff.

The term junk food meaning food that is unhealthy or has little or no nutritional value is believed to have been coined by Michael Jacobson, director of the Center for Science in the Public Interest, in 1972. It has since come into common usage.

Junk food contains high levels of refined sugar, white flour, trans fat and polyunsaturated fat, salt, and numerous food additives such as monosodium glutamate and tartrazine; at the same time, it is lacking in proteins, vitamins and fiber, among other healthy attributes. It floods our food marts because it is relatively cheap to manufacture, has a long shelf life and may not require refrigeration. It is popular with consumers because it is easy to purchase, requires little or no preparation, is convenient to consume and has lots of flavor.

Consumption of junk food has been associated with obesity, heart disease, Type 2 diabetes and dental cavities. Eating a poor diet when pregnant or breastfeeding may cause long-lasting health damage, according to child, animal studies by the Royal Veterinary College and London's Wellcome Trust. The offspring of rats fed fatty, processed food had high levels of fat in their bloodstream and around major organs even after adolescence had a raised diabetes risk, even if they ate healthily.

There is also concern about the targeting of marketing to children. During 2006, in the United Kingdom, following a high-profile media campaign by the chef Jamie Oliver and a threat of court action from the National Heart Forum, the UK advertising regulator and competition authority, Ofcom, launched a consultation on advertising of foods to children. The Food Standards Agency was one of many respondents. As a result, a ban on advertising during children's television programs and programs aimed at young people was announced. The ban also includes marketing using celebrities, cartoon characters and health or nutrition claims.

In the United States, there is no such agency and little incentive to regulate advertising. Accordingly, it is up to parents and articles in the media, such as Health Notes, to expose the dangers of unhealthy eating but also provide good advice.

Today, it's easier than ever to find a version of your favorite brand or type of snack food that is lower in fat or sodium — or both — than the "regular" version. With a bit of comparison-shopping, you'll find snack foods you can enjoy even if you are on a restricted diet. These are some of the descriptors to look for on the front of the package:

- fat-free: less than 0.5 grams (g) of fat per serving
- low-fat: 3 g or less per serving (if the serving size is 30 g or less or 2 tablespoons or less, no more than 3 g of fat per 50 g of the food)
- light: one-third fewer calories or half the fat of the "regular" version
- low-sodium: 140 milligrams (mg) or less per serving (if the serving size is 30 g or less or 2 tablespoons or less, no more than 140 mg of sodium per 50 g of the food)
- lightly salted: at least 50 percent less sodium per serving than the "regular" version reduced: when describing fat, sodium or calorie content, the food must have at least 25 percent less of these nutrients than the "regular" version.

Also, here are some tips for food preparation:

- Steam, boil, bake, or microwave rather than frying.
- Season with herbs and spices instead of fatty sauces, butter or margarine.
- Try flavored vinegars or lemon juice on salads.
- Replace whole milk with low-fat or skim milk in puddings, soups and baked products.

But don't starve yourself; remember:

There was a young lady from Lynn
Who was so exceedingly thin
That when she essayed to drink lemonade,

The business of antennas

D.S. Kennedy takes its place in town history

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

In 2008, the speed and clarity of long distance communication is largely taken for granted. In a matter of seconds e-mail can be sent around the world and back again, a cell phone call can be made from almost anywhere and international news can be broadcast around the world nearly instantly.

Over the past few decades, communication has evolved drastically. And believe it or not, a Cohasset company played an important role in the evolution. D.S. Kennedy Inc. Antenna Equipment made its mark on the development of powerful antennas used for communication and espionage.

In the coming weeks, the building that once housed D.S. Kennedy antenna will be torn down in preparation for the construction of the 200-unit Avalon apartment complex.

While the building is the last landmark evidence of D.S. Kennedy antenna, the company still lives on in other ways. Many employees went on to start their own companies in the antenna industry and some of D.S. Kennedy's antennas are still exist around the world.

The memories of the company are still very much in the minds of the employees who remain in and around Cohasset. Throughout the month of September, a collection of photos, antenna models and advertising brochures from the heyday of D.S. Kennedy will be on display at the Pratt Building (the historical society's headquarters). A special lecture night featuring Gilman Wilder, founding member of the D.S. Kennedy company and its first vice president, will be held on Wednesday, Sept. 10 at 7p.m. with light refreshments.

Despite a relatively short life span of 16-years (1947-1963), D.S. Kennedy was at the forefront of antenna technology for much of its existence and was the largest antenna manufacturer in the world in the 1950s.

"We rode a huge wave in the Cold War, a tremendously large wave," says Wilder.

Founded by a team of local entrepreneurs, Donald S. Kennedy, Warren S. Pratt and Gilman B. Wilder, in 1947, the business got its start at Francis W. Hagerty's "Cohasset Colonials" furniture kit firm. During World War II, Hagerty's company contributed to the war effort by creating antennas and antenna covers ("radomes") to conceal the technology. The radar was installed at the bow of PT boats. After the war, Hagerty wanted to go back to focusing on furniture and his four employees set off to start D.S. Kennedy.

It was Wilder's job to find a suitable location for the fledging entrepreneurial venture. He located a former grain mill at 432 South Main St. near the Cohasset-Scituate line. For $35 a month, D.S. Kennedy operated out of the first floor of the building.

"(The landlord) told me there was not much in there but a 40-watt bulb," said Wilder, and they also agreed to buy the building in a few months for $35,000. Although he had little more than 35 cents in his pocket, he took the place, borrowed some money from his father and D.S. Kennedy was born.

In its 14-year life, the company set up antennas all over the world and attracted heavy weight customers like General Electric, ITT, Raytheon and General Dynamics. D.S. Kennedy antenna products were used at the start of the Cold War period to warn against aircraft and missile attacks.

One of their largest contracts was the Distant Early Warning (DEW) lines across northern Canada. The company quickly grew out of its space on North Main and built a 102,000 square foot manufacturing plant on Whitney Hill (the entrance is across from Good Sport).

When they landed a contract with General Electric to build huge radar antennas for Thule, Greenland, Kennedy leased space at the Hingham Shipyard.

At one time, Kennedy employed 1,200 local residents ranging from Quincy to Kingston. But, Kennedy's products reached far and wide.

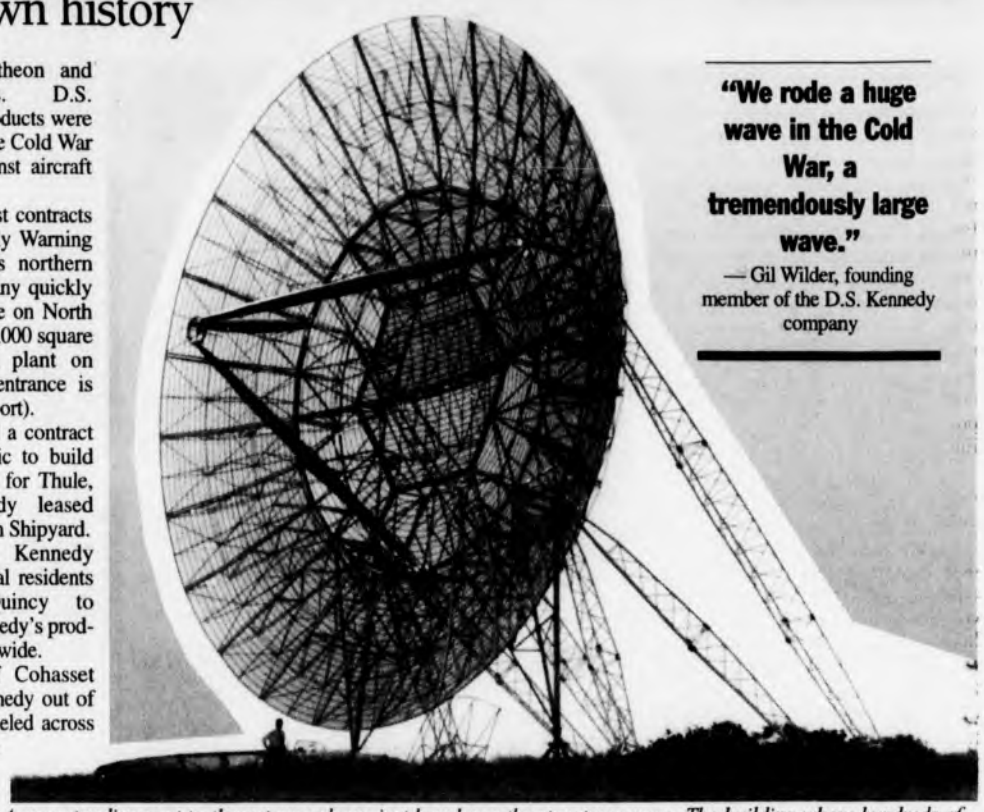
Merle Brown of Cohasset started a job at Kennedy out of high school and traveled across the US and the world installing the antennas. He traveled to exotic locales like the Aleutian Islands and Hawaii to install the equipment.

One of the D.S. Kennedy antennas was installed personally by Wilder in Turkey — and later became a bargaining chip in the Cold War with the Soviet Union.

When President John F. Kennedy made a deal with Premier of the Soviet Union Nikita Khrushchev to end the Cuban Missile Crisis, the US part of the deal was to remove two missiles located in Turkey near the Soviet border. Alongside those missiles was a D.S. Kennedy antenna that was removed as well.

"Kennedy was only the beginning of antenna history on the South Shore," says Glenn Higgins, a former employee continued to work in the antenna industry his entire career. RF Systems, which started with former Kennedy employees, relocated to Florida in 1975.

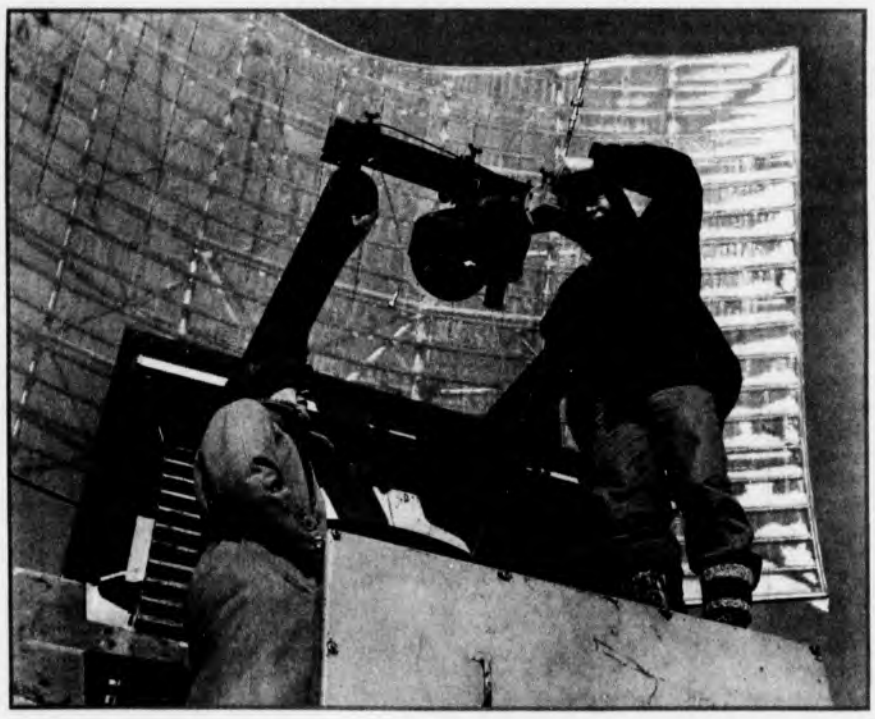
Although it now operates as Comtech Antenna Systems, "it is still going, it is the longest living (spin-off companies) out of all of them." When Higgins retired in 1999, he was the last surviving Kennedy employee.



John Seavey, a Cohasset resident, started at Kennedy as a young MIT engineer and earned the highest annual salary of any MIT grad in 1958 — $7500.

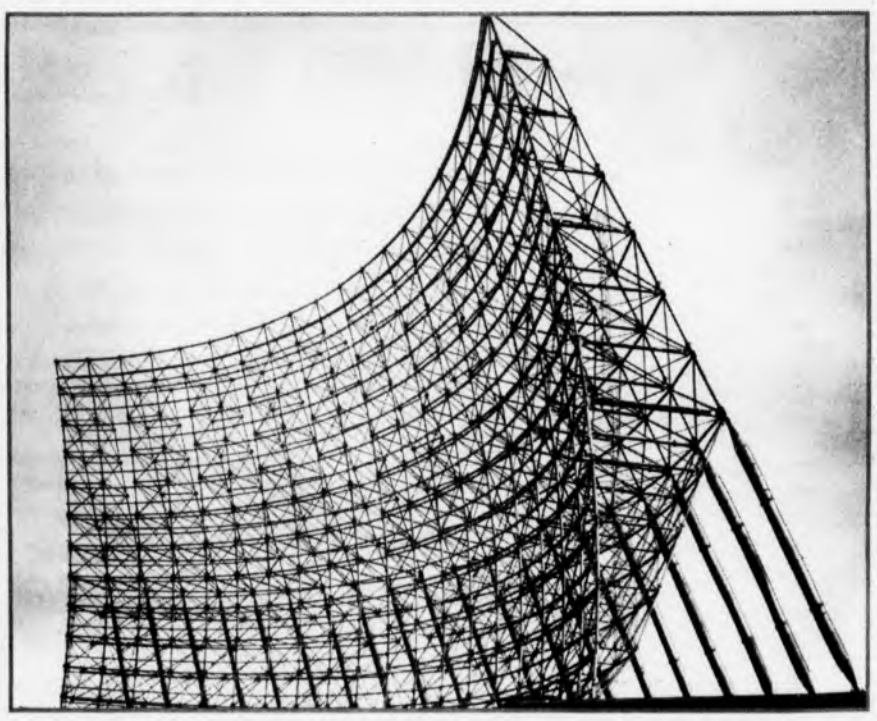
"I chose this crazy field," said Seavey, "and have met thousands of people along the way."

He later started his own firm, Seavey Engineering Associates based in Pembroke, and occasionally has used the Whitney Hill property as a testing facility. He salvaged the doors of the former Kennedy building for the collection.



Although it has been many years since they have worked closely together, Wilder, Brown, Higgins and Seavey talk easily about their times at D.S. Kennedy Antenna. They hope the many other former employees and descendents of employees will come to see and hear about the history and legacy of D.S. Kennedy.

The exhibit will run during September, Monday through Friday, 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. at the Cohasset Historical Society's headquarters at 106 South Main St. A lecture on the D.S. Kennedy years by Gil Wilder will be held on September 10th at 7:30 p.m. at the Society's headquarters with light refreshments at 7:00 p.m. Call the Historical Society at 781-383-1434 for more information.



"We rode a huge wave in the Cold War, a tremendously large wave."

A man standing next to the antenna shows just how large the structures were. The building where hundreds of antennas were built will be torn down in the coming weeks in preparation for the 200-unit Avalon apartment complex.

During its 16-year life span, D.S. Kennedy antennas were installed all around the world. This photo and more D.S. Kennedy memorabilia will be on display this month at the Cohasset Historical Society.

One of D.S. Kennedy's biggest jobs was to build and erect Distant Early Warning (DEW) lines across northern Canada. The huge antennas were able to give early warning as aircraft left Russia during the Cold War.

Protecting the beauty of the town

COMMENTARY

CONRAD LANGENHAGEN

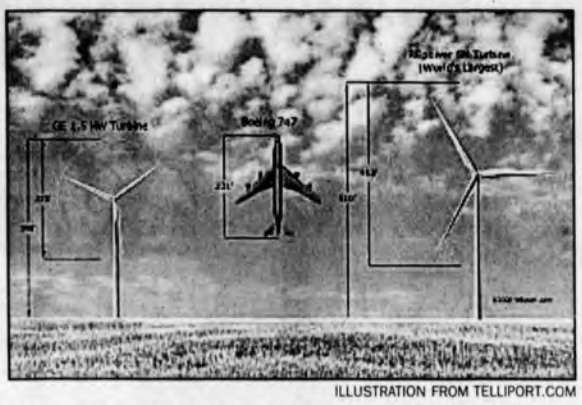

ILLUSTRATION FROM TELLIPORT.COM

As you can see, this is larger than putting a 747 jumbo jet at the top of the Statue of Liberty, reaching about the height of the old John Hancock building in Boston, times two turbines.

It is difficult to fully appreciate the size and scale of these modern wind turbines until you stand in their shadows. The turbines in Hull are visible from Boston, and even the North Shore on clear days.

Cohasset has embraced alternative energy in the form of passing a bylaw that enables placement of commercial grade turbines on sites including the Graham Waste Services location off Route 3A. While this is a laudable goal, now is also the time for the Planning Board to take deliberative steps to protect the natural resources of Cohasset, namely the sightlines, from visual pollution in the 2008 version of a gold rush to green energy. I write this letter as a financial backer to about 1,500MW of wind turbine projects in the US, Brazil, and Europe.

As the first wind-farm development, and a private for-profit endeavor, the Graham Waste Services site requires thoughtful deliberation because it imposes a significant visual impact on the entire town and nearby neighborhoods with no compensatory element to those affected. In contrast, the town of Hull benefits directly from its turbines, so in many ways residents are "compensated" for the negative impacts of the massive structures. On the Graham Waste Services site and others surely to follow, no such compensation mechanism is in place. One of the benefits of wind energy is that the fuel cost of wind turbines is zero. However, wind farms also consume other intangible resources, including visual costs that directly impact quality of life and real estate values. Often, wind farms that don't benefit the town or neighbors directly (like Hull's does) are charged impact fees to developers to financially remunerate the town and neighbors in exchange for the permanent negative impacts on aesthetics and tangible property values that result. In addition, there are also often community funding commitments extracted from the developers, as well as steeply discounted off-take agreements secured to get low-cost energy. My understanding is that none of these are in place in the current development.

The main driver of these issues is the scale of the commercial turbines that can be used, in this case two 1.65 MW units. The turbine towers would measure about 320 feet from the base to the hub and about 462 feet from the base to the tip of a blade in a vertical position. To give a sense of perspective, to the left is a view of a 1.5MW turbine, which is smaller than proposed. As you can see, this is larger than putting a 747 jumbo jet at the top of the Statue of Liberty, reaching about the height of the old John Hancock building in Boston, times two turbines.

It is difficult to fully appreciate the size and scale of these modern wind turbines until you stand in their shadows. The turbines in Hull are visible from Boston, and even the North Shore on clear days. They are obviously completely out of scale for neighborhoods, whether those close to the Graham site, the transfer station site, the middle school, or elsewhere in town. This will be exacerbated even further by the elevation of the hill on which the turbines will be positioned.

However, I think wind turbines can peacefully coexist with neighbors if constraints are put on their size and their impacts to sightlines. Over time, as turbines become more efficient, more power will be generated by the same-size turbines so I recommend that the Planning Board consider a height restriction as a reasonable measure of limitation. The turbine installed at the IBEW hall in Dorchester is a 100 kW unit on a 35-meter tower with a blade diameter of 21 meters while the Hull I turbine is on a 50-meter tower with a blade diameter of 47 meters. Somewhere between those two turbines should be an adequate size limitation for commercial developers in Cohasset. The town can be part of contributing to the green movement, developers can make money, and impact on neighbors and the town's beauty can be minimized. For municipal turbines that benefit the town directly, perhaps a different threshold should be discussed and options voted on based on siting considerations and the potential benefits to the town.

Without a doubt, the profit-motivated developers will decry such a limitation, saying they cannot make adequate returns to justify the effort. However, with a fuel cost of zero, the question isn't whether a turbine in adequate wind conditions can make money, but more a matter of how much money it can make depending on the size and efficiency of the turbine. I do not believe it is the Planning Board's responsibility to protect the profit margin of developers, or help them achieve a certain return on investment. The town has given developers the ability to install wind turbines, but it has not given them a blank check to underwrite minimum profits or returns. It is now in our hands to protect the town and preserve its beauty for generations to come in the face of the modern gold rush to green energy. Most developers are motivated not the prospect of generating green energy for environmentalist reasons, but by the prospect of green money that comes from wrapping themselves in the cloak of the trend du jour while destroying the very environment they claim to be protecting. And unlike Hull where all the generated energy is delivered to the municipally owned grid, the residents of Cohasset do not benefit directly but incur all the negative impacts of the turbines.

This first development is a true precedent-setting moment for the town, as it will set the tone for what we are willing to accept in terms of aesthetic impacts on the town to line the pockets of developers and investors. It is particularly important given the natural beauty of our town and its exposure to wind. It is easy to look directly to Hull to see what may come our way. Inevitably, proposals will be put forth to install turbines right off our harbor and beaches where the wind is its most powerful and unobstructed — prime wind turbine locations. Hull is already working on turbines off Nantasket beach and these will make Hull I look like a pinwheel. When this trend comes to Cohasset, how will we tell the Wakemans, the Dormitzers, the Graykens, and the other residents with million-dollar views that we will allow a 747 jumbo jet-equivalent to be parked in the sky outside their houses? Better yet, if we don't allow it, how will we justify to the other residents impacted by these massive structures that their quality of life is less valuable?

Most wind farms in the United States are located on sparsely populated wind-swept fields and mountain ridges. Wind resource is certainly the primary reason, but cattle and trees are usually the only dwellers impacted by the turbines and they don't usually object too strenuously, particularly when their landowners reap handsome rewards in the form of land leases and royalty payments. In Cohasset, I hope the Planning Board will help to protect the beauty of the town, the welfare of the neighbors adjacent to the wind farms, and the interests of the future generations that will live with the impacts of decisions made on this issue.

Not leaping on 'green bandwagon'

roads, live in nearby neighborhoods and support local businesses.

Lastly, new research (accessible at www.windturbinesyndrome.com) by Dr. Nina Pierpont, a graduate of Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine reveals that wind turbines built closer than two miles from homes and businesses pose potential adverse health effects. Her findings suggest that low-frequency noise and vibration generated by wind machines can have an effect on the inner ear, triggering headaches; difficulty sleeping; tinnitus, or ringing in the ears; learning and mood disorders; panic attacks; irritability; disruption of equilibrium, concentration and memory; and childhood behavior problems. If just one of our town's children or residents is afflicted with a health issue as the result of this project, isn't that one too many? Consider that many businesses, homes and our town's schools are within two miles of the proposed site.

Let's not quickly leap aboard the green bandwagon in such a dramatic fashion without fully understanding the consequences. The residents of Cohasset owe it to themselves to carefully consider the impact of this proposed project and share their views with the town planning board, who will be evaluating it at a public hearing on Monday, Sept. 8, at 8 p.m., in the lower level meeting room at Cohasset Town Hall.

In my view, our town should be feeling blue, not green about this project.

'07 Finals ouster fuels fire for strong returning cast of CHS lady booters

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Unfinished business.

That's the theme of the upcoming fall season for the Cohasset girls' soccer team.

22 of the 24 CHS girls who were on the field for last November's heartbreaking 1-0 loss in the South Sectional finals to Norwell are now back in blue and white.

"We've got some pretty high expectations," said veteran head coach Deb Beal, who in '07 directed the Lady Skippers to a record of 16-4-3, including her career best three postseason wins. "And the girls appear ready for it. They've come back in great shape. They're working real hard on their fitness, and they're doing a lot of things very well together already. I think it's going to be a lot of fun."

The strength of the Cohasset team will once run right up the middle of the field. Johanna Brophy is back to start in goal, Sammi Lehr at sweeper, Maggy McGoldrick and Sarah Coggins as the center midfielders and Torey Hart at striker. All five are seniors and returning South Shore League all-stars. The latter three are the team's tri-captains.

The 5-foot-2 Brophy, as fiery as she is fearless and athletic, pounces on everything in the goal area like a pit bull on raw meat.

"Sometimes you get a lump in your throat watching the way (Brophy) dives to take the ball off (opposing players') feet," said Beal, "but you realize it's the only way she knows how to compete."

It's almost comical to see Brophy stand beside and quite literally in the shadow of her "final line of defense", fluid 5-foot-9" athlete Lehr at sweeper.

"It sometimes looks like Sammi can cover the whole defensive zone from sideline to sideline," said Beal. "She's such a fun athlete to watch play. She definitely looks like someone who's going to play a sport at the (college) level, be it basketball or soccer."

McGoldrick and Coggins seem virtually interchangeable at defensive center mid and offensive center mid, respectively.

"Maggie and Sarah are both tireless, smart players who control things in the middle of the field," lauded Beal. "Honestly, I'd love to see them both on the attack. I feel tempted at times to do just that because those positions are kind of the thankless ones that don't get a lot of attention or press, but they really are so valuable to us right where they're playing."

Junior Tori Lehr, Sammi's sister, will round out the middle crew.

"You always want to be strong up the middle, and I don't think we could ask for a better lineup than this in the middle," said Beal. "It's pretty exciting to bring this number of players back who were huge impact players and all-stars a year ago."

There was actually a sixth Lady Skipper named to the all-star team last season. That was sophomore sensation Kaci Kucinski. All this young woman did in her freshman campaign was top the tea min goals (18) and tie Hart for the team scoring title (27 points). She's back looking to improve on that this season, and she'll be joined up front by fellow sophomore speedster Caroline Fein, a late season revelation last fall who will likely be used all over the place in the front six this season.

"The way Caroline and Kaci run and handle the ball, and the way they've started to work with Torey is a pretty fun thing to see," said Beal. "If you're an opposing team, it's like which poison do I choose. If you concentrate on shutting down two of them, the other one could be the one that gets you."

Senior Meredith Kelly is also back to reclaim her starting fullback spot. Ditto for junior Christine Coner and sophomore Mackenzie Hart (Torey's sister) at the outside mid spots.

The Skippers lost just two players from last year's team: senior co-captains Meg Anderson and Anna Haggerty.

Haggerty was a stalwart at right fullback last fall. Anderson was a key member of the varsity team for several years, but mononucleosis cost her most of her final season. Fortunately, she was cleared to play just before the start of the state tourney, and got to play a bit in the postseason.

So that leaves just one starting spot up for grabs, Haggerty's fullback spot.

At the time of this writing, sophomores Lindsay Davis and Carli Haggerty (Anna's sister) are in a group of players battling it out for minutes at that spot.

Beal says that senior Kristin Monaco and junior Samantha Crough have been two of the more pleasant surprises to date, and noted that both are in position to log major minutes and perhaps even take a starting spot.

"Samantha is coming off a great basketball season, and you can see her confidence is booming," said Beal. She's a very tough kid mentally. And Kristin just works extremely hard and is willing to go wherever you need her and give 100 percent."

The varsity roster will be rounded out by senior Brittany Dunn, juniors Alex Foley, Dominique Rioux, Megan Richardson and Melissa Campedelli and sophomores Danielle Sookiasian and Rachel Fredey.

In all, there are 40 girls in the program this fall, a "very good number", according to Beal.

"We've got another handful of girls on JV who could probably contribute to the varsity, but I'd much rather see them continue to develop more with regular playing time at the JV level than playing shorter minutes with varsity."

The Lady Skippers set their sites first and foremost on the Norwell girls, the three-time defending SSL champs and a team none of them have ever beaten. In action last year, the Lady Skippers dropped a 1-0 decision to their Norwell counterparts and tied the second regular season meeting, but then dropped the 1-0 heartbreaker in the south finals.

Athlete of the Month

Hanover Legion pitcher/DH Andrew Aizenstadt of Norwell was a huge factor in the Indians' run to Divisional and State titles and appearance in the New England Regional Tournament last month. In the state tourney, Aizenstadt picked up a trio of wins, striking out 10 batters in the opener over Newburyport. He also recorded the team's only win at the New England's, allowing just three hits while striking out nine. At the plate, Aizenstadt belted a two-run homer in the state finals win over Walpole and had five hits in two games at the New England's.

Coastal Nissan has donated $500 to the Hanover American Legion Baseball Team in Andrew Aizenstadt's name.

wait long for that meeting, as they host the Lady Clippers a week from Monday night, Sept. 15, at Alumni Field (7 p.m.) start.

"I'm sure there will eb a lot of excitement around the school that day and night, like there always is when we play Norwell," said Beal. "But we've got four more games before that one, and we've got some pretty tough opponents there too."

Indeed, Beal backed away from no opponent in preparation for this season.

The non-league schedule features games with several larger school powers, beginning with yesterday's schedule opener with perennial Div. 2 powerhouse Notre Dame Academy in Hingham. The Lady Skippers will also host Notre Dame on Oct. 23, and play Rockland and Plymouth North at home.

"The way I look at it is I'd rather play some top opponents to get ready for the tourney rather than go for a high seed," said Beal. "Who cares about seeds? You've got to be ready to beat any team once the tourney gets underway."

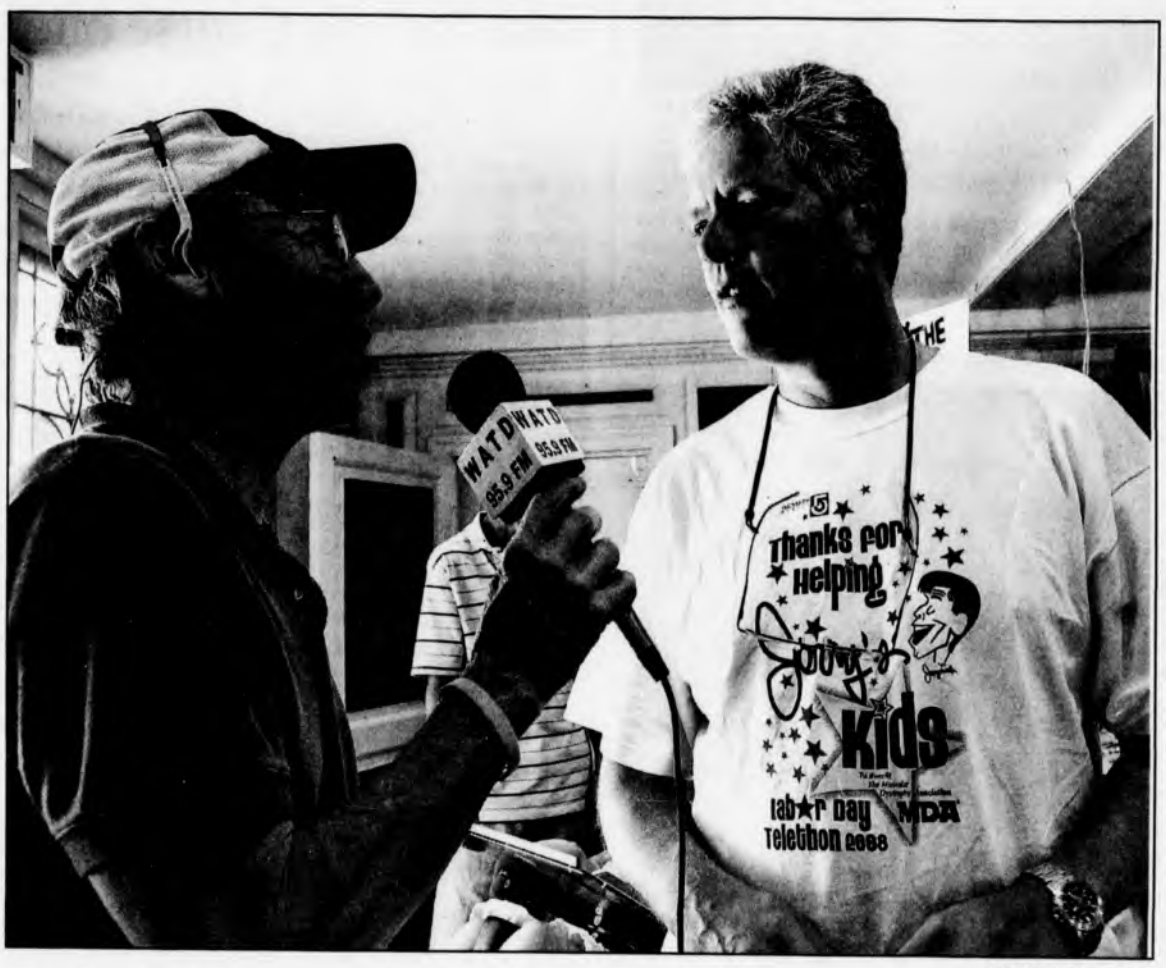
Large turnout at weekend MDA telethon party

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

Good weather, lots of enthusiasm and generosity, and strong support from Hingham and surrounding communities added up to a successful 32nd Annual Tolman MDA telethon party.

Despite the tight economy, the event raised more than $15,000 for the fight about muscular dystrophy, with more money coming in as the 24-hour event wrapped up. More than $400,000 has been raised for the cause since the first Tolman telethon party.



"It was another wonderful year, with many hard-working volunteers," said Jay Tolman of Forest Circle, Cohasset. "There were many heart-warming moments as new people got involved and joined our effort."

A wide variety of people showed up for the event, "from Peter Miller who was at our first telethon fund raiser to new people who came for the first time who wanted to help prior to next year's event."

The party, now in its fourth decade, drew a large crowd of both adults and children. The Hingham Community Center was decked out with colorful balloons and banners for the occasion. There was dancing, music, South Shore Joey clowns, and refreshments ranging from taco salad and fresh fruit cup to chocolate chip cookies and cake – a special decorated one this year in honor of Charlie Tolman's 21st birthday.

A Labor Day breakfast and cookout, prizes, music, raffles, a hula-hoop contest, and a lively performance by the Smith-Houlihan Irish Step Dancers, which kicked off the festivities Sunday night, made for a festive occasion. Entertainers Alli Beaudry and Ken Wilson, performing at the event for the first time, were among the main attractions.

Add to that an appearance by WCVB-Channel 5 to tape the party on Sunday, D.J. Paul Ciccone and the lively music he plays for party-goers, including those who like to dance, and an appearance by Majic, a South Shore band, and you have an event that offers something for everyone.

WATD's Sam Kopper of Hingham, interviews Jay Tolman of Cohasset during the 32nd Annual Tolman MDA telethon party at the Hingham Community Center over Labor Day weekend. Check the web at www.wickedlocal.com/Cohasset for a photo gallery of the event.

Every year there's something new. This time, Chloe Tolman, whose family recently moved to Cohasset, and two friends, Rebecca Antoine of Hingham and Anna DeLong of Concord, were selling hand-painted rocks bearing special words such as "love," "hope," "MDA," "friends," "peace," "Never give up," and "Make a wish" for $2 each.

Anna, 11, said this was her first time attending the annual event during the evening and that the rock-painting fund raiser was Chloe's idea. "We collected different-sized rocks at Black Rock Beach in Cohasset and then painted different words on them," Anna said.

"It was another wonderful year, with many hard-working volunteers."
— Jay Tolman, Forest Circle

Rebecca, like her friends, has been attending the event with her parents since she was a child. "This is a great chance to see friends from other years, and I like to help raise money for the MDA," she said.

Chloe, who has attended the telethon with her family since she was a baby, said the event is meaningful to her because she likes "to help people, and this is a good way to do it."

Anna recently found a photo of herself and Chloe taken at a telethon party "when we were really small." The three friends giggled about that.

Charlie and Chloe's younger brother, Jack, 10, enjoyed collecting donations, socializing, and playing with the other children.

Adults were equally generous with their time and money. Some volunteers spent several hours the Saturday before the event setting up for the party and then showed up the next day to lend a helping hand wherever needed.

One gentleman wrote a check for $32, one dollar for every year the event has taken place.

Tolman was pleased at the good turnout, although attendance was down a bit from last year – due in large part, he thinks, to the pleasant weather and the desire to soak up the sun as the summer draws to a close.

He was pleased to receive a call earlier from a young man now in college who had attended the MDA party when he was seven or eight years old. "He remembered coming here as a young boy and made a donation over the phone," Tolman said.

The event began as a simple gathering of a few friends in 1976, during which about $50 was raised for MDA research. The effort has grown to include hundreds of volunteers and many supporters from Hingham and other South Shore communities.

"Muscular dystrophy takes away things we take for granted, and with the continued support of many, the battle will be won," Tolman said. "Many thanks to all who came by and made a donation. We'll be back again next year to continue our support and work to help end muscular disease."

The event coincides with the national Jerry Lewis MDA Telethon. Even though no phone calls are made during the Tolman event, residents of Hingham and neighboring towns and even from out of state are generous with their donations. Those who were unable to attend but who would like to make a contribution may send their donations, made payable to MDA/Muscular Dystrophy Association, to: MDA Telethon, c/o Jay Tolman, 3 Forest Circle, Cohasset, MA 02025. Donations may also be made online at www.tolmantelethon.com.

Dance steps up

Fall Preview: Dance
IRIS FANGER

The Bill T. Jones/Arnie Zane Company performances, Oct. 24-26 at the ICA in Boston, may be the most talked-about dance event of the season.

The fall dance season started early for members of the Boston Ballet. While the rest of us were catching the last breezes at the beach, the company was off to South Korea for the first time ever, on a one week tour at the end of August. Artistic director, Mikko Nissinen has been determined to carry the news about how well his troupe is dancing to the four corners of the earth. And the composition of the company matches its globe-trotting itinerary. Half of the dancers hail from 16 different countries; the rest from the U.S.A

Financial issues are reflected in the size of the company, now numbering 40 dancers, down from last season's 51, as they head into a pair of season openers. The annual Gala Performance, "Night of Stars," is scheduled for Oct. 10, followed by a revival of "Cinderella," choreographed by James Kudelka, and set to Serge Prokofiev's score, Oct. 16-26, both at The Wang Center. The Gala will feature mostly solos and pas de deux by the company members, joined by New York City Ballet principal dancers, Maria Kowroski, of the impossibly long legs and charismatic stage presence, and Albert Evans. We'll also get a preview of the Boston Ballet's local premiere of the George Balanchine classic, full-length ballet, "Jewels" and a world premiere by former Boston Ballet principal dancer, Viktor Plotnikov who is making a name for himself as a choreographer. "The Nutcracker,' Nov. 28-Dec. 27, will return to The Opera House, in advance of the 2009-2010 season when the Boston Ballet moves all its performances to that venue.

The Bill T. Jones/Arnie Zane Company returns to the Institute of Contemporary Art with a work that's certain to be the most talked-about experience of the season. Jones has emerged as a choreographer-artist-social commentator whose output transcends the ordinary bounds of dance. He has been commissioned by the prestigious Ravinia Festival near Chicago to create a work about the life and impact on America of Abraham Lincoln. The full piece will premiere at Ravinia next July, but Jones brings the work "in progress," currently titled "Another Evening: Serenade/The Proposition," to Boston, Oct. 24-26. In collaboration with a videographer, a composer, a designer, musicians, an actor, and his troupe of splendid dancers, Jones has based the spectacle on Lincoln's own writings, those of his contemporaries, and observations on the historical perspective. The project promises to be a fitting descendent of Jones' major piece, "Last Night At Uncle Tom's Cabin/The Promised Land," which premiered in 1990.

Back at the local modern dance community, choreographer Caitlin Corbett will present "Tom's Wealth: A Dance for the Masses" at the Tsai Performance Center, Boston University, Sept. 19-20. The evening-length piece, danced by a company of five professional performers and 30 non-dancers (men, women, and children), is based on the scene in Mark Twain's novel, "Tom Sawyer," when Tom collects 16 treasures in exchange for "allowing" his friends to whitewash the fence. Corbett, one of the most luscious movers in town, has long been entranced by groups of people moving in ordinary ways on stage. She finds the honesty and vulnerability that untrained dancers bring to the spotlight an affecting experience for her audiences.

Celebrity Series of Boston will offer only one dance event this fall: the New York-based, contemporary group, Lar Lubovitch Dance Company, at the Tsai Performance Center, Dec. 12-13. (The Celebrity Series dance schedule picks up in the spring with Hubbard Street Dance, Mark Morris Dance Group, and the Alvin Ailey 50th anniversary tour.)

World Music & CRASHarts will present Celtic Tap: an evening with James Devine at the Institute of Contemporary Art, Oct. 17-19. Devine is listed in the Guiness Book of Records as the fastest tapper in the world, his feet clicking at 38 taps per second. Philadanco presents works based on African-American traditions, mixed in with jazz, ballet and modern dance, also at the ICA, Nov. 12-16.

The Jose Mateo Ballet Theatre and School is busy making plans for improvements to their home-base at The Sanctuary Theatre in the Old Cambridge Baptist Church, after receiving an award of $291,000 from the Massachusetts Cultural Facilities Fund. The performing season opens with "Fearless Symetries," a program that runs Oct. 10-26 in Cambridge.

A jazzy scene

Fall Preview: Jazz
ED SYMKUS

Once upon a time, like back in the 1950s, Boston trailed only New York and Chicago as the place to be if you were a jazz fan. There were jazz joints on just about every corner. The small clubs have been gone for a while, but even with limited venues, there's still plenty of jazz to go around. Something for everyone from smooth jazz to mainstream to way-out-there will be coming to town over the next few months.

September

Bassist Avishai Cohen (Sept. 4) and his trio feature music from their newest album, "At Home," at the Regattabar in Cambridge. Chris Potter, who's a master of reed instruments, but a specialist on saxophone, performs at the Regattabar on Sept. 10 and 11. Oregon, the instrumental group now in its fourth decade, offers up their fusion of jazz and classical music at Scullers on Sept. 11, and then it's New York Voices, who will show why they're the proud winners of a Grammy award for a vocal group, at Scullers on the 12th and 13th. Danilo Perez, the Panamanian pianist who spent a number of years in Boston, returns to town with his blend of Pan-American jazz at the Regattabar on Sept. 12 and 13. Eldar successfully made it through his "child prodigy" days as a pianist and now shows his mature side at Scullers on the 18th. Bassist Dave Holland and his sextet, who have been playing together for a decade, bring their solid musicianship to the Regattabar, Sept. 18-20. Dane Vannatter, winner of the BackStage 2008 Bistro Award for Outstanding Vocalist, sings up a storm at Scullers on Sept. 23, and then on the 30th, it's Syncopation, the Boston-based jazz vocal quartet, celebrating the release of their new album, "Wonderful You."

October

Roy Hargrove lets his trumpet do the talking with hints of gospel, R&B, and funk at Scullers on Oct. 3 and 4. On the same two dates, you'll find Dee Dee Bridgewater, the singer who is a winner of both a Tony and two Grammys, presenting "Red Earth: A Malian Journey" at the Regattabar. Rebecca Parris, who started singing when she was still a kid in Newton, sings and scats her way through an evening at the Regattabar on Oct. 13. Chuck Mangione brings his mellow flugelhorn and wears his trademark hat to Scullers, Oct. 17 and 18. Pianist Michel Camilo and his trio could play anything from jazz to classical to pop to film score music at the Regattabar, Oct. 16-18. Grace Kelly, young saxophonist extraordinaire, who somehow keeps getting better, plays at Scullers on Oct. 30.

November

Drummer Brian Blade & the Fellowship Band play tunes from their newest album, "Season of Changes," at Scullers on Nov. 6. That same day, you'll find The Bruce Katz Band, featuring Katz' virtuoso keyboard work on selections from their new album, "Live! At the Firefly," at the Regattabar. The Rippingtons enter their third decade as a smooth jazz group with a show at Scullers on Nov. 7 and 8, and then, at the same club, you'll find Laszlo Gardony, the Hungarian-born pianist who lives in Boston and teaches at Berklee, on the 11th.

Regattabar — 617-661-5000 or www.regattabarjazz.com

Scullers Jazz Club — 617-562-4111 or www.scullersjazz.com

Also of note...

The Berklee BeanTown Jazz Festival, with concerts at the Berklee Performance Center and a series of three outdoor stages on Columbus Ave., takes place from Sept. 25-27. Performers include Cindy Blackman and Terri Lynne Carrington, Geri Allen, Patrice Rushen, James Carter, Kurt Elling, Walter Beasley, Randy Weston, Andre Ward, many more.

For information on ticketed concerts, call 617-747-2261. For information on all concerts, including free ones, visit www.beantownjazz.org.

Highland Jazz in Newton begins its 26th season with the Paul Broadnax Quartet, featuring Fred Haas, on Sept. 13 at Newton South High School Auditorium. A second concert, a twin bill with Sheila Jordan and Steve Kuhn, is set for Nov. 1. Concerts in 2009 will star George W. Russell Jr. and Friends with Wannetta Jackson (March 28) and Mark Harvey & the Aardvark Jazz Orchestra (April 25).

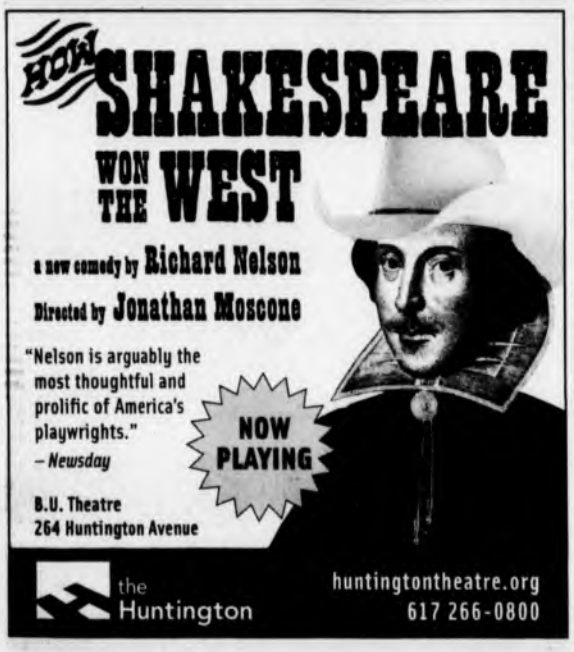
The rise of fall

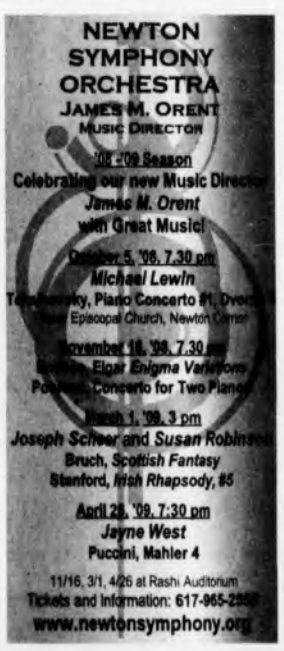
Pick your shows, mark your calendar

Wake up, it's fall.



Bears may hibernate in the winter, but in the summer, it's the human brain that goes to sleep. In the summer, we like movies that are big and dumb. Or better yet, we do nothing at all — just sit in the sun and read a book that's the intellectual equivalent of ice cream.

But fall's here. Time to turn the brain back on. The Greater Boston arts and cultural scene is loaded with shows and events that will pique your interest and stimulate your thoughts. Or, there are plenty of events for you if you're still in turn-your-brain-off-and-just-have-fun mode — which reminds me, do you have your tickets for the New Kids on the Block reunion shows on Sept. 26 and 28?



We're also here to help you enjoy the bounty. Once again, we present our Seats for the Season contest — your chance to win a pair of tickets to some of the hottest shows of the year. You'll find the entry form in this section. Enter, and good luck.

In the meantime, check out this fall bounty, and mark your calendar.

Joy of golf in Florida's Broward County

Steve Marantz
GATEHOUSE NEWS SERVICE

PLANTATION, FLA. - We came out of the north with our rusty swings, three old buddies from Nebraska, Minnesota and Massachusetts, in search of warmth and the healing power of the little white ball. Everything we needed was within a drive and a chip from Fort Lauderdale, Fla.

Four days and four courses - Plantation Preserve, Heron Bay, Diplomat Country Club and Deer Creek - gave us a taste of Broward County golf, wildlife, food and sun.

The golf was not uniformly good, nor was the sky always blue, but we swung our clubs like inmates on parole and soaked up even the minor overcast with gratitude.

Wood stork, ibis and heron greeted us at Plantation Preserve, a certified Audubon course with a 30-acre wetlands preserve, owned by the city of Plantation.

The 7,200-yard course has five tee boxes - we played the white tees at 6,250 yards - over a mostly flat track with ample water, little rough, and an occasional ficus and sable tree. The back nine is the more interesting as holes 12-15 skirt the swampy preservation area, where as many as 24 varieties of bird might be glimpsed.

Dating to the early 1950s, and built around a Tequesta Indian burial mound, Plantation features a saltwater-resistant grass called Sea Dwarf Paspalum, found nowhere else in Broward County. We did better on Paspalum by hitting down rather than sweeping the ball. As for the greens, there is less break than meets the eye.

Plantation Preserve is built around a Tequesta Indian burial mound, with play on saltwater-resistant Sea Dwarf Paspalum grass.

"This grass is not very grainy - there's no grain in the greens," said Brian Schuler, head pro. "The roll is true and the greens are fair."

Next was Heron Bay, 210 acres of flat, arid and treeless property in Coral Springs, on the edge of the Florida Everglades. Heron Bay was the site of the Honda Classic through 2002, until the tour players complained it was too bland.

Before we teed it up, a regular warned us, "It's all about the sand." Heron Bay has 92 bunkers - wide gaping sprawling affairs that seem to gobble up more of the fairways than grass does. Water is a factor on just three holes. Architect Mark McCumber designed the course for low under-the-wind shot making, with openings for shots along the ground, as well as open paths to the greens.

But the openings are narrow. The par-5 fourth hole, for example, plays 602 yards from the back tee and 548 yards from the middle. There are 10 bunkers, with three surrounding the green. It runs toward the north, and with the wind in our faces, it was nasty.

Diplomat Country Club, in Hallandale Beach, is a lush resort course with eight acres of lakes that reminded us of a bygone era. Its heyday, in fact, was the 1950s, when Bob Hope, Jackie Gleason and Yogi Berra were favored customers.

No. 2 is the signature hole - you know it immediately. The 385-yard par 4 requires the second shot to fly a pond to a large two-tiered island green framed from behind by a fountain and an old-style spa.

Our fourth outing, and favorite, was Deer Creek in Deerfield Beach, perhaps because its rolling terrain reminded us of courses back home. South Florida tends to be flat, but Deer Creek has elevated greens with bunkers built into the sides, as well as rolling, undulating fairways. Adjacent homes are set back farther than at most courses, further allowing for the buildup of contours and terrain.

"This is a second-shot golf course," said Marty Martinez, general manager. "You can afford to spray the tee shots but find the ball and recover for a par or bogey. A lot of courses you find water off the tee."

No. 18 is the signature hole. A 388-yard par 4, it doglegs left, with trees up the entire left side, and with a canal crossing the fairway in front of the two-tiered green. More water borders the green on the right, demanding a tee shot center or right for a proper angle. My drive drew left, forcing a second shot out of sticky rough that needed to draw, but did not.

Splash in the water. The soggy ending, still, did not dampen my enthusiasm for Broward County golf.

Off-Season Play and Save

The summer and early fall is not when golfers in northern climes normally think about South Florida, but maybe they should.

The off-season brings hefty discounts at South Florida courses and hotels.

Most of the 61 courses in the Fort Lauderdale area offer two-for-one discounts or half-price fees through September, according to tourist officials. A premium course such as the Diplomat costs as much as $189 in high season, but off-season it's a deal.

"The Diplomat costs $59 after 2 p.m. (through September) for unlimited play until sundown - that's a great value," said John Webb of the Greater Fort Lauderdale Convention and Visitors Bureau.

Plantation Preserve, owned by the city of Plantation, costs $115 for out-of-state golfers in season, but drops down to $35 in summer. Heron Bay in Coral Springs drops from $125 to $35. Deer Creek in Deerfield Beach drops from a winter high fee of $140 to a summer twilight fee of $35.

Courses are less busy in the low season by as much as 30 percent, making for faster play. Temperatures hover between the high 80s and low 90s - not as extreme as northerners might fear.

"We're fortunate being on the coast - the temperatures aren't as high as inland, and the breeze does temper it," said Webb.

However, afternoon rain squalls are common in August and September, he said.

Hotel rates drop by as much as 50 percent in the summer and early fall. Restaurants and shops, and outdoor and entertainment venues also offer two-for-one discounts as part of the area's Summer of Discovery promotion, through September. Find deals at www.sunny.org/discovery.

IT'S HAPPENING

Series starts with prisoner of war experience

The Cohasset Historical Society will present the first of its fall lecture series on Wednesday, Sept. 17 when Rabine Andreau will speak about her family's experience as prisoners of war in a Japanese camp in Malaysia during WW II.

On Wednesday, Oct. 15, Historian David Wadsworth explores another fascinating aspect of our town's history as we accompany him on an armchair tour of the Village and the Common.

November's offering, on Nov. 19, will be a lighthearted adventure into the objects of yesteryear. Participants will be asked to identify items from the museums and guess what it was used for. You are invited to bring an item from home and 'stump' the audience.

All Wednesday evening programs will begin at 7:30 in the Society's Headquarters at 106 S. Main St. There is no cost for these programs and light refreshment will be served.

Other events planned for the fall include a program on the "History of Town Hall" on Sunday, Sept. 21 from 2 to 4 p.m.. Speakers for this program that details the past as well as the future of Town Hall will include David Wadsworth, David Farrag and Jim Sandell.

The Society will hold its Annual Meeting and Fall Dinner on Sunday, Oct. 26, at the Cohasset Harbor Resort from 5:30 to 9 p.m. with speaker, John Horrigan talking about "Bay State Phantoms". In December, the Annual Wassail Party will be held on Dec. 7 from 2 to 4 p.m. at the Pratt Building.

The Society invites all to attend the programs. For additional information please call the Cohasset Historical Society at 781-383-1434.

Local quilt guild to present show

The Herring Run Quilt Guild, representing over 100 quilters from 16 South Shore communities, including Cohasset's Betsy Millard, will present its 10th Biennial Quilt Show at the Norwell Middle School on Rte 123 (330 Main Street) on Saturday, Sept. 20, from 10 a.m. to 5p.m., and Sunday, Sept. 21, 10a .m. to 3 p.m.. More than 150 traditional and art quilts will be on display including quilts judged viewers' favorites from the past 9 shows. Entrance fee is $6. Door prizes, vendors, demonstrations, snacks and a boutique will be available as well as a silent auction to benefit breast cancer research.

The mission of the Herring Run Quilt Guild is to educate and encourage its members in the art of quilt making and to do charitable works. Last year the guild made and distributed 49 quilts to social service organizations from Weymouth to Plymouth. A queen sized quilt of red and orange poppies on a white field, hand appliqued by members, will be raffled off on Sunday. Participants need not be present to win. New members are welcome to join the guild. See herringrunquiltguild.com for more information.

Piano lessons resume

Priscilla D. Daniels, professional pianist and teacher of pianoforte, resumes her lesson-schedule at her Beach Street home in Cohasset. Her personalized instruction has attracted students who have had careers in music, while others play just for pleasure.

Mrs. Daniels is a graduate of the New England Conservatory of Music of Boston, magna cum laude. She is a member of Alpha Chi Omega, national sorority, and Pi Kappa Lambda, honorary professional society. She has taught in Swampscott, Lincoln, Norwood, and currently in Cohasset.

As part of each lesson she incorporates music theory, harmony, rhythm study and expression. She encourages her students to improvise and compose, and strives to communicate a love and appreciation for the fine arts through the medium of the piano.

Boy Scouts to meet

Cohasset Boy Scout Troop 28 will kick off the upcoming year with a meeting at the Lightkeeper's House on Thursday, Sept. 11 at 7 p.m. A full calendar of events, trips and service opportunities will be discussed.

Boys interested in joining the Boy Scouts are welcome to attend with a parent. To be eligible, a boy must have completed fifth grade and be at least 10 years old but no older than 17. No prior scouting experience is necessary.

Troop leaders will be present at the meeting and happy to answer any questions from prospective scouts or their parents.

Those unable to attend but would like information on scouting can e-mail troop28scoutmaster@comcast.net.

Kids' Mini Triahlon on Cohasset Day

The Cohasset Triathlon Association is pleased to announce the formation of a kid's mini triathlon on Cohasset Day (Sept. 20th from 3 – 4 pm). All kids ages 6 – 13 are welcome to participate in this free event.

Peter Brown, Chairman of the Economic Development Committee who is spearheading Cohasset Day, stated, "we are very exited to add the mini triathlon to the schedule. Bill Burnett and his team will do a fantastic job in providing a fun event for kids to participate in."

The mini triathlon is technically a duathlon (no swimming involved). The course will take place around the Town Common. Kids will run .2 miles, bike .5 miles, and then finish with a .2-mile run. There will be 4-5 heats each organized by sex and age. Each participate will wear a Cohasset Triathlon race bib.

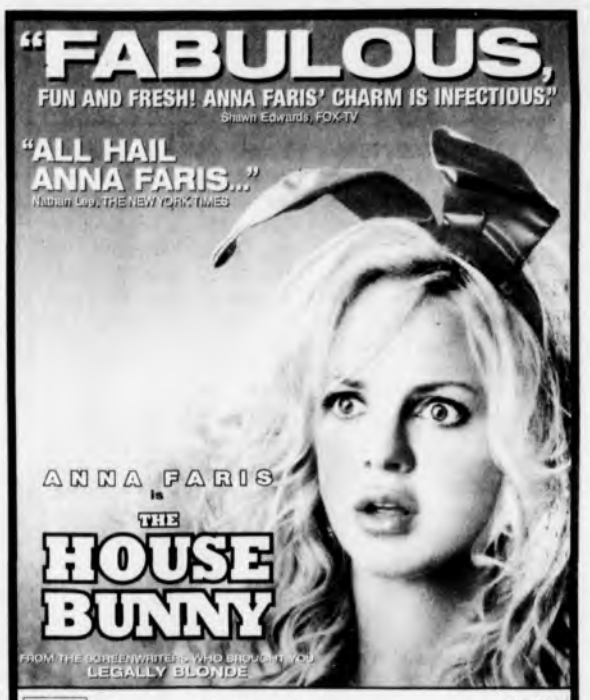
A pre-registration form must be filled out and returned to Bill Burnett by Sept. 19th to participate. No registration forms will be accepted on race day.

For a copy of the registration form, please email billburnett@cohassettri.com or go to Good Sports.

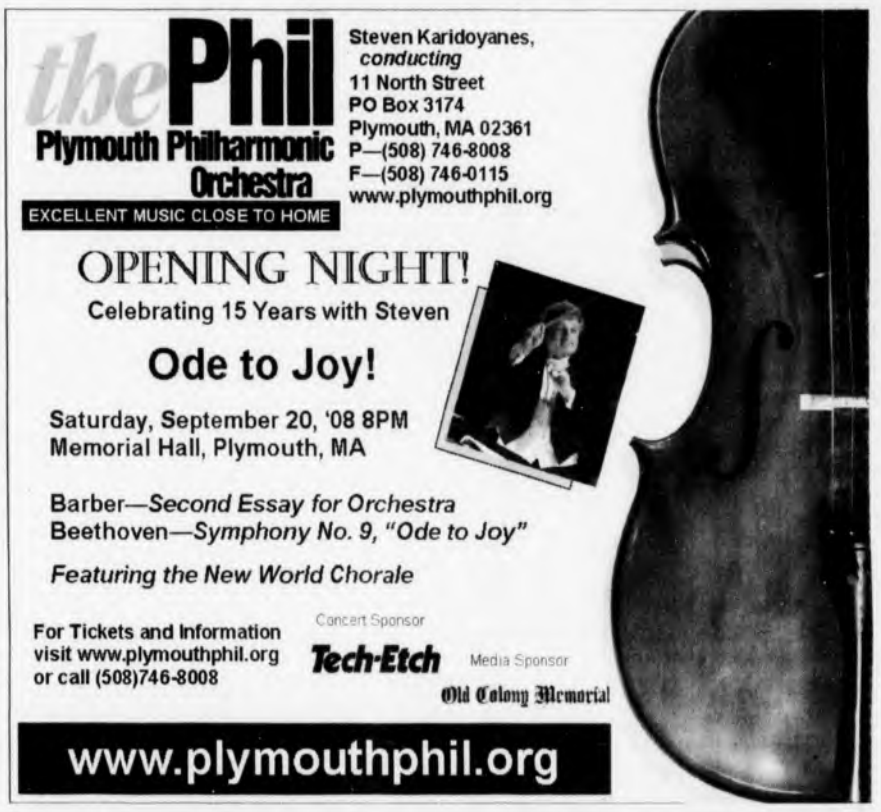
Rud Eile concert venue change

Aisling Gallery will host a concert of the best of traditional Irish music, featuring critically acclaimed band Rud Eile and guests, Sunday, Sept. 7, at 4 p.m.

Glastonbury Abbey and the Aisling Gallery regret that, due to unforeseen circumstances, the planned "Afternoon of Irish Music" featuring Rud Eile cannot take place in the grounds of Glastonbury Abbey on Sunday, Sept. 7th as announced.

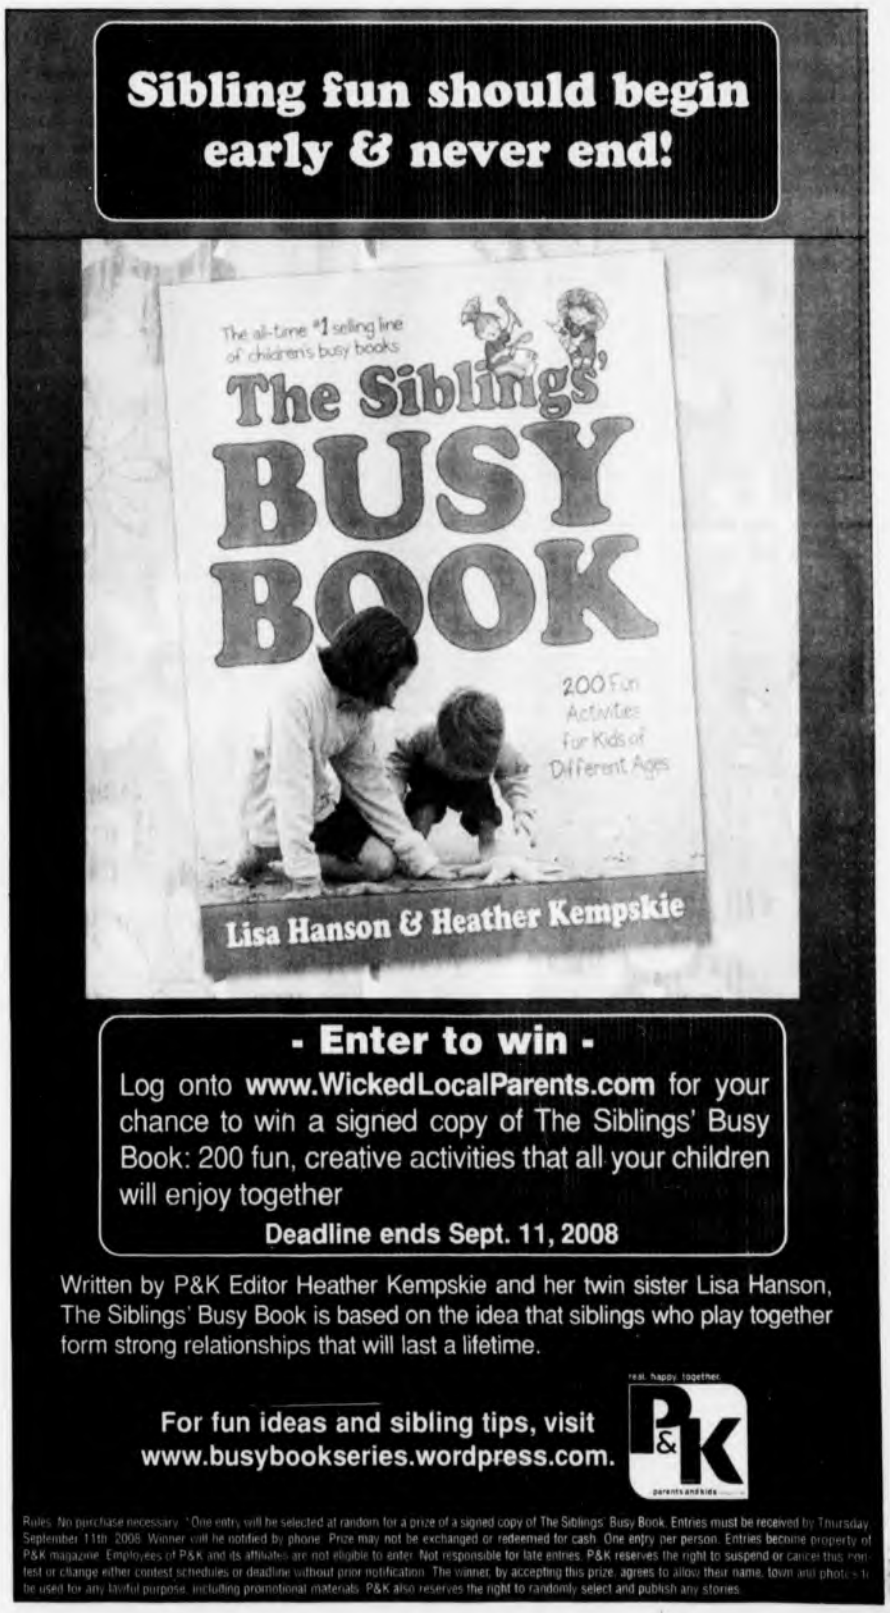


However, to avoid disappointing those looking forward to the concert, Rud Eile have agreed to perform at the Aisling Gallery, 229 Lincoln Street (Rte. 3A), Hingham. The performance will begin at 4 pm.



There will be no cover charge for entry to this concert. Those who already purchased advance tickets for the originally scheduled concert can receive a full refund by contacting the Aisling Gallery.

Rud Eile (pronounced rud ella), based on the South Shore, has been widely acclaimed here and in Ireland. The band's current self-titled album has been receiving airplay from Boston to San Francisco, Dublin to Warsaw, and has been a hit on Web-based and satellite radio. However, Rud Eile is best known for the power and passion of their live performances.



For in formation, call, 800-752-9389 or visit www.aisling-gallery.com.

SALOME'S STARS
FOR RELEASE WEEK OF
SEPT. 1, 2008

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) A little "wool-gathering" for the usually productive Lamb is all right if it helps you unwind. But be careful; too much daydreaming can put you behind schedule in your work.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) A work problem is close to being resolved. Now you can go ahead and celebrate the week, accepting invitations from friends who enjoy your company.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) Getting your new plan accepted won't be a major hassle if you have the facts to back it up. Your supporters are also prepared to help you make your case. Good luck.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) Dealing with a pesky job problem might be time-consuming but necessary. The sooner you get this situation settled, the sooner you can move on to other matters.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) Career advancement is favored thanks to your impressive work record. On the personal side, you should soon hear some good news about an ailing family member.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) There might be mixed signals from a certain someone who doesn't seem all that certain about his or her intentions. Best to sort it all out before it becomes more confusing.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) Get all the facts about that investment "opportunity" before you put even one dollar into it. There could be hidden problems that could prove to be costly.

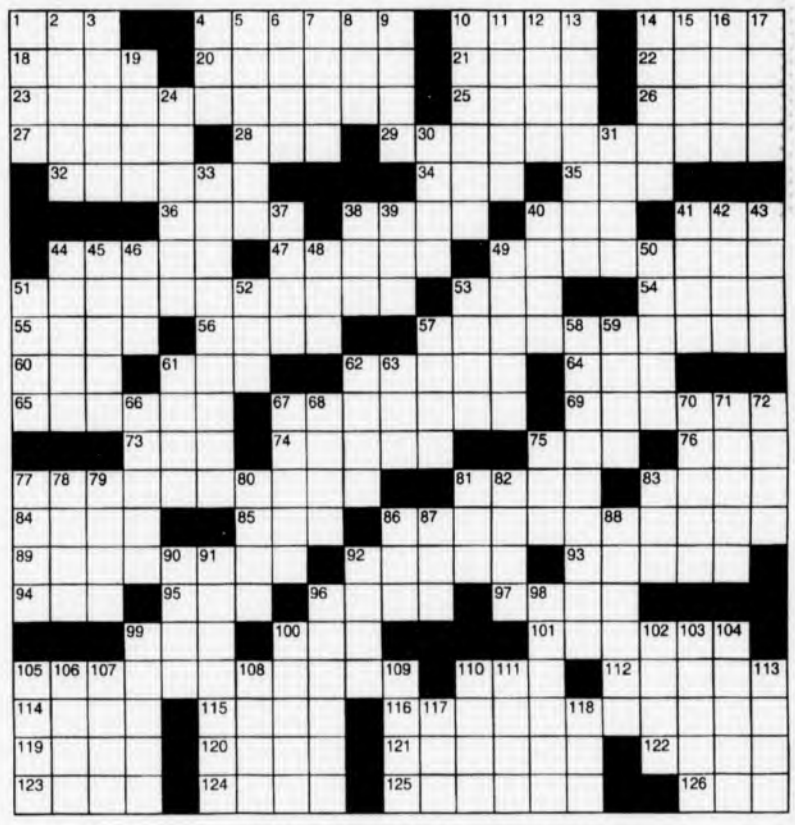
SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) Compromising on a matter you feel strongly about not only ends the impasse, but can be a win-win deal for all. Remember: Scorpios do well with change.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) With all the demands you currently have to deal with, accepting the help of family and friends could be the wisest course to take at this time.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) Recent upsetting incidents might have left you with a big gap in your self-assurance. Refill it by spending time with those who know how worthy you really are.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) A dispute about money needs to be resolved quickly, before it festers into something more serious. Consider asking an impartial colleague to mediate the matter.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) A soft approach could be more effective than making a loud demand for the information you need. You might even find yourself with more data than you expected.



(c) 2008 King Features Synd., Inc.

BORN THIS WEEK: You're sought out for the wonderful advice you're able to offer to others. And sometimes you even take it yourself.

Fun By The Numbers

Like puzzles? Then you'll love sudoku. This mind-bending puzzle will have you hooked from the moment you square off, so sharpen your pencil and put your sudoku savvy to the test!

Here's How It Works:

Sudoku puzzles are formatted as a 9x9 grid, broken down into nine 3x3 boxes. To solve a sudoku, the numbers 1 through 9 must fill each row, column and box. Each number can appear only once in each row, column and box. You can figure out the order in which the numbers will appear by using the numeric clues already provided in the boxes. The more numbers you name, the easier it gets to solve the puzzle!

THE CIRQUE IS COMING!

Duxbury native brings the show to Boston

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

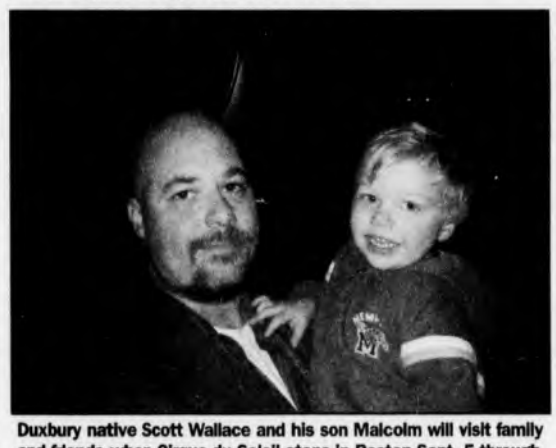
More than 50 of the world's best acrobats, jugglers, trapeze artists, and clowns will be center stage Friday when Cirque du Soleil's latest production, "Kooza," opens at Boston's Bayside Expo Center. The performers and an even greater number of crew members, along with a 65-trailer-truck-long caravan, arrived in Boston late last week.

"Our setup takes a full seven days, including the installation of our VIP tent, entrance and rehearsal tents, box office, administrative office, kitchen and dining area for cast and crew, and our own power generator," said "Kooza" General Manager Scott Wallace. "It takes a team of 80 people just to set up our signature Big Top tent, the Grand Chapiteau, which stands 66 feet high, 167 feet in diameter, and is supported by four masts, each 80 feet tall."

Wallace, who was born in Weymouth and graduated from Duxbury High School in 1984 after moving there as a young child, now makes his home in the "Cirque Village," which springs up wherever the show plays on the road.

"I'm like the mayor of what is really a small town in some ways. We have 126 people in our company, including performers and 22 children, on tour with us, from 18 different countries. I'm the tour manager, which means that I handle the business aspects of everything we do, and I also look after the people in our touring company."

That includes many people who are not only multi-cultural, but also multi-talented, something Wallace says still thrills him almost 10 years after he first joined Cirque du Soleil.



"The production features 'Les Quiros,' one of the best high-wire acts in the world. My heart races every time I watch the 'Wheel of Death.' I'm also always moved by the story of the Innocent, who has the ability to reach in and touch the hearts of audience members of all ages. I've always believed that what Cirque does best is creating magic through emotion."

It was not quite 25 years ago that a group of about 20 Canadian street performers formed Cirque du Soleil. The Quebec-based company now employs some 4,000 people, including more than 1,000 artists, from 40 different countries. This year alone, Cirque will present 17 productions simultaneously throughout the world under the leadership of founder and chief executive officer Guy Laliberte.

The Hand to Hand act is just one of the many performances that will take place during Cirque du Soleil Kooza.

Duxbury native Scott Wallace and his son Malcolm will visit family and friends when Cirque du Soleil stops in Boston Sept. 5 through Oct. 5. Wallace is general manager of the Quebec-based circus.

A return to the beginnings of Cirque du Soleil with the joining of the two traditions of acrobatic performance and clowning, Kooza focuses on the physical demands of human performance, and all the accompanying splendor and fragility, blended with classic slapstick humor. The name Kooza is taken from the Sanskrit word 'koza," which means "box," "chest" or "treasure." It was chosen for this production because it conveys the idea of a "circus in a box."

Wallace, who admits he was feeling a little boxed in himself when he left Northeastern University early to join the touring crews of rock groups including Run D.M.C., the Beastie Boys, and AC/DC, joined Cirque in 1999 following periods as a production manager with both Boston Ballet Company and Boston Lyric Opera.

"As soon as I left Duxbury High, I did a semester at Northeastern before deciding it wasn't for me. I really just wanted to work. The experience I got with union stage hands in that period of my life really helped to understand all kinds of performances and all kinds of performers. I learned something different from each company. I really enjoy all different kinds of art forms including opera, the ballet, and rock and roll. I love them all, but I probably learned the most about the technical side of a production from the work done in rock and roll shows. Touring is touring, of course, but rock shows have the money so they do things the right way."

Touring may be touring, but for Wallace it has been a lifestyle. While his mother, Paulette Wallace, a former local newspaper editor, and sister, Stacey Hennessey, now live in Bourne, and his brother, Glenn, in Plymouth, Wallace calls the road home.

"Some of my stuff is in storage in Plymouth and some in Montreal, but home will be whatever city we're in between now and next April, when I plan to finally settle in Montreal with my wife, Veronique, and our son, Malcolm."

For the next month, at least, home is his old home, and Wallace is glad to be back.

"I'm very excited to be bringing this show to Boston. I'll be celebrating my birthday when we're in Boston, so I'm taking my wife and son to my 'church,' Fenway Park. Malcolm is only two-and-a-half, so this will be his first Red Sox home game.

"Also, I'm planning to get together with one of my closest friends, Darin MacFarland, who is now technical director at the Duxbury Performing Arts Center. We met many years ago when we were both in the Duxbury Thespian Troupe. It's going to be great to be home again and be able to see family and old friends."

Cirque du Soleil will present Kooza at the Bayside Expo Center, 200 Mount Vernon Street, Boston, Sept. 5 to Oct. 5. For tickets and information, visit the box office, call 1-800-678-5440 or go online at cirquedusoleil.com

Jake Armerding hits Kingston

A new sound plays the Beale House Sept. 6

By Emily Wilcox
EWILCOX@CNC.COM

KINGSTON – He made the right moves.

Boston's folk scene was probably one of the most fertile places for a creative seed like Jake Armerding to plant himself. It didn't let him down.

He assassinated the blues, walked on the world and did a few other things that turned into his song titles. What Jake Armerding didn't do was take a misstep.

That's why the non-profit South Shore Folk Music Club is so excited to announce its latest concert, Jake Armerding with Taylor Armerding at 8 p.m., Saturday, Sept. 6, at Kingston's Beale House.

Doors open at 7:30 p.m.; tickets are $15.

You could argue that it all began with Taylor Armerding, Jake's father – an editorial writer and columnist and (oh, by the way) an amazing mandolin player and singer with Northern Lights. This bluegrass band needed a fiddle player, and at 13, Jake Armerding was already showing signs of brilliance. Dad had son join the band, and the rest is musical, familial history.

It wasn't long before Jake Armerding wrote songs and recorded his first CD, Caged Bird while attending Wheaton College. Boston's folk radio station WUMB picked it up, bestowing the 2001 Best New Artist award on Armerding. The next thing he knew, the Nashville label Compass Records wanted to invest in Jake Armerding, who released a self-titled CD with the company in 2003. Rave reviews poured in, and Armerding's music poured out as he toured all over the country and world.

It's hard to define Armerding's style. He plays fiddle, guitar, combines a bluegrass, pop sound with his soothing voice and creates a hybrid sound all his own. With so many yawn-a-minute pop musicians taking old hits and rewriting them with new lyrics, Armerding is a breath of fresh air. He's not out to ride the coattails of the Beatles or some '80s great to cash in on residual fame. He goes his own way. And his fans follow.

Joining him on stage next weekend will be his dad, Taylor. It's a rare opportunity to see the master and his legacy perform.

The Beale House is handicapped accessible, alcohol and smoke-free. For more information on The South Shore Folk Music Club, visit ssfmc.org.

The Beal House is located in the community building of the Unitarian Universalist Church at 222 Main St. Kingston.

Gusts of opposition for wind turbines

Sanctuary Pond, Avalon speak out

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

"Why would the town approve this project without knowing a dollar quantification?"
— Conrad Langenhagen, 24 Sanctuary Pond Road

At Monday night's first public hearing on two proposed wind turbines, the applicant did not have "fair winds." Scores of residents turned out for the meeting that was moved to the Town Hall auditorium last minute to ensure it would be able to accommodate the crowd.

Throughout the meeting, residents (many of whom gave addresses from Sanctuary Pond Road) asked tough questions about the project and many of those questions were left unanswered. The Avalon developers came out in strong opposition to the project. Once built, Avalon will be the turbines' nearest neighbor. Developers were particularly concerned because the approved — but yet-to-be-built — 200-unit apartment complex was not addressed in any of the impact studies presented in the application.

It wasn't all challenging questions. Attending the meeting, as well, were many advocates for wind energy in general and the project specifically who spoke in favor of the project.

The developers will provide additional data and impact studies as requested by the Planning Board in the coming weeks. The public hearing has been continued to Monday, Oct. 6 at 7:15p.m.

The project application, put forth by a private developer, CCI-Energy, proposes the installation of two 1.65-megawatt sized wind turbines sited on the Graham Waste Services site off Route 3A.

The application is a landmark project as it is the first for the town and the first venture under the Wind Energy Conversion Facility bylaw passed at the 2008 Annual Town Meeting. The bylaw, drafted by the Alternative Energy Committee and sponsored by the Planning Board, establishes town-wide zoning regulations for commercial size wind turbines — turbines greater than 500-kilowatts, or about the size Hull Wind I located near Hull High School.

It is a joint venture between CCI-Energy, Palmer Capital, Lumus Construction and Emergent Energy. Graham Waste business and landowner, Paul Barry, has leased the land to the developers.

Halfway there for Little Harbor

Sewer, water work has one more year

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Thank you for your patience.

That's the message that greets you each and every time residents drive close to Little Harbor. The Water and Sewer Commissions recognize the imposition and disruption to daily living in Cohasset their major systems upgrade is on residents.

There will be another year of road disruptions, but on the upside Cohasset has made it halfway through the invasive public works project. If all stays on schedule through the cold months of winter, the outlook is to have the project substantially complete by fall 2009.

"We in pretty good shape with the overall schedule," said Dan Coughlin of Coughlin Environmental Services, the firm designing and overseeing the project's sewer engineering aspects. According to the project managers and the contractor, the water portion of the project is 60 percent complete and the sewer is 50 percent complete.

A vision for Cohasset Day

Sat., Sept. 20; rain date Sun., Sept. 21

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

It's not everyday the residents of Cohasset are given the opportunity to cut a rug — and cut loose — amid the familiar storefronts and small town feel of the Village. It's not everyday they might be afforded the opportunity sample the food of local restaurants, cheer their kids on in a mini-triathlon — or even dunk a Selectman in a dunk tank.

It's just not everyday the residents of Cohasset come out, meet together, and celebrate themselves and the town they live in.

But, next Saturday, Sept. 20 (rain date Sunday, Sept. 21), there is a vision and plan in place to make all that and more happen at the first annual Cohasset Day.

Months in the making, Cohasset Day is an initiative of the Economic Development Committee in partnership with the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce.

It's just not everyday the residents of Cohasset come out, meet together, and celebrate themselves and the town they live in.

Behind practically every vision, there is a visionary. In the case of Cohasset Day, a relative newcomer to Cohasset, Alain Pinel, is it.

From the moment he stepped into Cohasset, he was in love. A native Frenchman who has traveled extensively in Europe and the US explains he instantly was drawn to Cohasset. He bought his home on South Main Street less than one week after driving through Cohasset. Now, he calls Cohasset "the best town in all the world."

State primary is Tuesday

Tiny turnout anticipated

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

There hasn't been much fanfare about it, since all eyes seem focused on the November presidential election, but there is a state primary this coming Tuesday, Sept. 16.

The results of this primary will determine which names end up alongside the presidential candidates on Tuesday, Nov. 4.

Voting for precincts 1 and 2 is held in the Cohasset Town Hall auditorium from 7a.m. to 8p.m. on Tuesday, Sept. 16.

There will be ballots for democrats and republicans, but only the democratic ballot has races for seats. Edward J. O'Reilly of Gloucester is challenging Senator John Kerry for his place in the US Senate. There is a three-way race for the Governor's Councillor between Christopher Iannella of Boston, Stephen Flynn of Hull and Robert Toomey, Jr. of Abington.

There are no races at all on the Republican ballot. Sen. Robert Hedlund,

"I expect the numbers to be low, very low."
— Town Clerk Marion Douglas

County Treasurer Edward O'Connell, and County Commissioner Ronald Davy are running unopposed.

On the Democratic side, Congressman William Delahunt, Rep. Garrett Bradley, Clerk of Courts Robert Creedon, and Register of Probate Robert McCarthy are not facing competition.

While there are ballots for the Green-Rainbow and Working Families parties, neither ballot has candidates on their ballot.

Town Clerk Marion Douglas is not expecting droves of residents to show up at Town Hall looking for a ballot.

"I expect the numbers to be low, very low," said Douglas, venturing to predict 5 to 10 percent of the town's registered voters, "but we're always hoping for more."

New Cohasset Mariner 'drop box' at Tedeschi's

The Cohasset Mariner has a new "drop box" and pickup location at Tedeschi's in the village. The drop box is on the counter in the front window around the corner to the left after you enter the front door.

The Mariner picks up at 8 a.m. on Mondays and Tuesdays. The drop box can be used to drop off glossy photographs, letters, flyers or other editorial copy.

The Mariner thanks Bill Ducharme at Tedeschi's for allowing Tedeschi's to be our new pickup location. For years the Mariner pickups were at Cohasset News, which is now a new dance studio. The Mariner thanks John and Larry Scott at Cohasset News for accepting Mariner items over many years. John and Larry are still at the Cohasset Butcher & Deli on Brook Street.

Standard procedures followed for cannon-ball-like device

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The State Police Bomb Squad determined a canon-ball-like device with an indentation on the top was a solid mass and not dangerous Wednesday afternoon.

Cohasset Police followed standard operating procedures after Dennis Bunting, 38, of Whitman, brought the device to the station around 12:30 p.m.

"Cohasset Police and Fire Personnel, upon learning of a potential explosive device in the vehicle, followed standard procedures and established a perimeter to ensure the safety of the public," Chief James Hussey said. "A short time later State Police Bomb Technicians determined it was not an explosive device."

Bunting and his father Richard Bunting were in Providence Rhode Island Tuesday removing a boiler system from a building and returned home with the item.

On Wednesday while on a job in Cohasset, a plumber friend told them it was a bomb and they brought the suspect item to the Cohasset Police Station. The area was cordoned off.

The State Police Bomb Squad was called to the scene to investigate the item that was located in the back of the men's Chevy Suburban that was towing a trailer. The item was removed without incident.

The bomb squad x-rayed the object and determined it was a solid mass and not dangerous, Hussey said.

"They are not exactly sure what it is but took custody of it," Hussey said.

Hit and run

An officer working a detail on Thursday (Sept. 4) saw a hit and run accident in the area of Jerusalem Road and Atlantic Avenue. Police said the Toyota pickup illegally passed a GMC Yukon on the left, striking the driver's side mirror.

The officer got the plate number and saw the gray pickup take off toward Hull. Other detail officers tried to stop the truck that continued on its way toward Hull.

Police ran the plate and notified area towns. A short time later, police said the truck was involved in an accident on Route 18 in Weymouth that involved personal injury. The operator, a 44-year-old Cohasset man, was arrested by Weymouth Police and charged with operating under the influence of alcohol, and leaving the scene after causing personal injury.

Cohasset is seeking charges of leaving the scene after causing property damage, failure to stop for a police officer, operating negligently as to endanger and marked lanes violation.

Loose dogs

Police recommend that residents allow loose dogs to find their way back home rather than detain the dog for the police. Chief Hussey said if the dog is an adult and does not appear to be sick or injured, the animal will often return home on its own. He noted that while he was jogging this week in Cohasset a yellow Labrador retriever followed him for about a mile.

Hussey said if the loose or wandering dog is a puppy or is sick or injured, then call the police. "If the loose dog is healthy, then picking the dog up should not be our first course of action," he said.

Hussey explained the Town of Cohasset does not have an agreement with the Scituate Animal Shelter to house stray dogs for free. Therefore, the town must pay boarding costs for strays that are brought to the shelter. Cohasset has a leash law that states dogs must be on a leash under their owner's control at all times.

"We try to find a balance," Hussey said. "We never want to leave a sick or distraught animal out there – but we cannot handle every single case of a dog wandering around.

"We want to give dogs the opportunity to find their way home."

Vandalism

• Police are investigating vandalism to the blue van at the Cohasset Sailing Club. Vandalism included the name "Mary Jane" scratched on the exterior along with some "obscene language," Chief James Hussey said.

"We are trying to determine the motivation or whether it was a random act," Hussey said.

The incident was reported on Labor Day morning (Monday, Sept. 1) and probably occurred sometime the previous night, police said.

• A 2005 Lincoln Navigator owned by a Summer Street resident was vandalized including damage to both the front passenger side window and rear bumper, police said. The woman reporting the incident was not sure where the damage occurred but first noticed it on Tuesday (Sept. 2) after being away for the holiday weekend with the vehicle, police said.

Cohasset Police Officer Brian Peebles walks a resident safely past a Surburban SUV with trailer that was originally thought to have had a bomb inside. The woman was escorted back to her residence behind the Police Station on Wednesday afternoon. The canon ball like device was removed from the SUV without incident by the Mass State Police Bomb Squad.

Mass State Police Bomb Squad technician Scott Sicard holds the item that was thought to be an explosive device. Richard and Dennis Bunting of Whitman, who operate Precision Heating, found the item under a building in Providence, Rhode Island Tuesday.

Solicitor

Police were unable to locate a solicitor, who was reported going door-to-door seeking funds for Children's Hospital and telling residents that he would be able to use some of the money to travel to London. The subject was never located, police said.

Neighbors

Two owners of condominiums in a complex in town have complained to police that a fellow resident in the complex has been using obscene gestures and threatening and vulgar language. The officer taking the report about the alleged incidents advised the reporting parties that they could seek criminal complaints for assault because of the language used toward them. Police said the incident, which was reported on Tuesday (Sept. 2), is part of an ongoing dispute at the complex.

Suspicious man

A South Main Street caller reported seeing a suspicious man walking around his backyard early Tuesday morning (Sept. 2) but did not report it until noontime. By that time, police said, the man was long gone. Chief Hussey urges residents to report any suspicious activity right away.

Train tracks

A concerned caller notified police about a man wearing a blue shirt and jeans sitting down in the middle of the train tracks near the 300 block of North Main Street on Tuesday (Sept. 2) at about 12:15 p.m.

An officer, who was dispatched to the area, saw a man walking along the tracks and get into a pickup truck. The officer spoke to the man and asked him what he was doing on the tracks, police said. Police determined the man, who is 45 years old and from Weymouth, was trespassing on the right of way and he was placed under arrest. He also had an outstanding warrant, police said.

Chief Hussey said police have a zero tolerance policy about trespassing along the Greenbush right-of-way. Violators will be subject to arrest, he said.

Check fraud

A Scituate grandfather reported his granddaughter had taken checks and forged his signature. Some of the checks were used in Cohasset, police said. Detectives are investigating and are working toward summonsing the girl who also lives in Scituate, to court for uttering a false check, police said. The grandfather reported the check fraud to police on Tuesday (Sept. 2).

Cab fare

An upset cab driver contacted police after dropping his customer off at a Cohasset home. The cab driver, who called at about 11:40 p.m. on Tuesday (Sept. 2), said he dropped a man off who had gone into the house 10 minutes earlier for money and had not come back out to pay. A police officer was able to raise a family member who paid the bill. It is not clear if the actual cab customer forgot to pay or not.

Parking problems

Parking at the Farmer's Market, which temporarily moved to the Little League Fields on North Main Street last week, was problematic. Police said market patrons parked "all over the place" and caused havoc for drivers and the neighborhood. Few patrons parked at the Swim Center as hoped. The Farmers Market relocated because of water main work near the common. However the roadwork has not reached the common, so the Market will be back at its regular location until further notice.

Short circuit

An electrical problem caused an issue with all the train crossings in town last Thursday at about 5:50 p.m. The MBTA notified police and the train was held at the station while repairs were made. The service was back up and running soon thereafter, Chief Hussey said.

Batty

An officer went to a resident's West Gate Lane home on Saturday at 5:14 a.m. after receiving a report of a bat being caught in the resident's telescope. The officer was able to remove the bat. Chief Hussey said police try to assist residents when they can on animal issues. He explained the animal control officer is part-time and works 16 hours a week, so he is not always available.

Gusts of opposition for wind turbines

Throughout the presentation, questions by the audience, the town's consulting engineer John Modzelewski and Planning Board members revealed weaknesses in the application.

The project developer, headed by Jim Sweeney of CCI-Energy, is still determining the make and model of the turbines that will potentially be on the site. Two manufacturers make 1.65-megawatt turbines and there is a possibility CCI-Energy could purchase turbines currently owned by the Massachusetts Technology Collaborative originally slated for installation in Orleans, Mass., Sweeney said.

Whether the electrical connections would be underground or on poles was yet to be determined.

The noise and flicker impact studies did not take into account the Avalon development and Planning Board member Clark Brewer said the noise study submitted was "a little thin."

"There are many questions and maybe (the applicant) already has additional back up. But, it is not the intent to pay John (Modzelewski) to do engineering for the project. We need a lot more information—and detailed information," said Planning Board member Charles Samuelson.

Modzelewski went through a litany of items he had concerns with after his preliminary review of the project. Noise, visual and flicker impacts were at the top of his list. As a civil engineer, he admitted he was not an expert in wind turbines but would seek out engineers with the proper background to aid him in reviewing the project. He suggested a true-to-life approach be taken with identifying the impacts of the potential turbines, such as placing balloons at the height of the proposed turbines (100 meters or 462-feet) so residents can see just how tall the machines are and more detailed noise/flicker analysis, not just using computer generated models.

"This is a major thing, a gargantuan structure," said Modzelewski, adding he needs to see the entire site review specs from grading to electricity connections.

Planning Board Chairman Al Moore assured the concerned residents that all the technical aspects of the project would be thoroughly vetted through the site plan review process and Monday night's hearing was only the beginning of the review process.

"We're not going to rest until we have answers on noise and flicker (impacts)," said Moore. The wind turbine flicker, or strobe, effect occurs when the turbine is between the sun and the point of observation.

"We want to look at this; it has got to be a win-win. I truly believe this is the wave of the future and (wind turbines) is what we should be doing," said Sweeney of CCI-Energy. "This is a project where we want both parties — the developer and the town — to win."

Opposition from Sanctuary Pond

Sanctuary Pond Road, or the Rose Hill development, is a 14-home subdivision located off Route 3A about 600 feet south of lower King Street. The residences would be within a half-mile of the proposed project and most would be able to see the turbines from their property.

Jeff Patterson of 10 Sanctuary Pond Road was the first resident to pepper the applicant with questions. He first asked questions regarding Emergent Energy's experience with permitting wind turbines. Emergent Energy is handling the feasibility study and the permitting process for the project.

Sweeney and Emergent Energy disclosed neither company had seen an entire wind turbine project through to completion. Sweeney and CCI-Energy got through the permitting process for a turbine project in Fair Haven, Mass., but the project is currently tied up in litigation. The representatives from Emergent Energy said although they have worked on many different turbine projects and portions of the permitting process, they had never done the entire permitting package for a wind turbine project.

Patterson did not get definitive answer when he asked which type of turbine would be installed. He raised concerns that the developer is considering turbines that would no longer be under a service agreement from the manufacturer.

Conrad Langenhagen of 24 Sanctuary Pond Road, who wrote a letter to the Mariner last week, was concerned with the size of the turbines and if the developer was truly minimizing the visual impacts of the project according to the zoning bylaw.

Sweeney said if the turbine was any smaller or lower, it could affect the multi-million dollar project's ability to get financed.

Langenhagen then asked what the impact monetarily would be for the town if a deal was negotiated to sell the excess energy for use in the town's buildings. Sweeney said he had no hard numbers, but "there is no doubt in my mind the town will benefit."

"Why would the town approve this project without knowing a dollar quantification?" said Langenhagen. His question was met with applause. Yet, Chairman Moore was quick to settle the crowd down.

"Issues of finance or how the town might benefit financially is not part of this site plan review. Whether or not the project makes money or loses money is not our concern," said Moore, further requesting the audience to hold their applause as it made it difficult to hear the proceedings.

The residents of Sanctuary Pond are not alone in their concerns as evidenced by Doug Bryan of 20 Sanctuary Pond Road presentation of 185 signatures of citizens concerned with the turbine project.

Avalon 'oversight'

The 200-unit Avalon apartment complex was issued a comprehensive permit in 2004 by the Zoning Board of Appeals. Until this past summer, the proposed 40-B project was tied up in appeals as the town and the developer struggled to find a solution to deal with the site's wastewater. In July, the project reached a cooperation agreement with the Cohasset Water Commission, which had appealed the Department of Environmental Protection's approval of the on-site groundwater discharge permit a year ago and the developer expects the project to move forward within months.

In the meantime, the Graham Waste wind turbine project has been developed over the last two years. Graham Waste Services business owner and landowner Paul Barry said he told CCI-Energy that the project was never going to happen because of the numerous appeals. Sweeney of CCI-Energy said the lack of consideration of the Avalon project was "an oversight."

A five-page letter to the Planning Board from Goulston & Storrs, the law firm representing Avalon, enumerates the reasons they feel the wind turbine project application fails to meet the zoning bylaw requirements. Steven Schwartz of Goulston & Storrs spoke briefly at the public hearing to highlight the concerns spelled out in detail in the letter.

"The lot on which the project is proposed is entirely inappropriate for the installation of wind turbines. The impact on the residents of Cohasset living near the project would be unacceptable, and the proponent has failed to establish compliance with the applicable provisions of the Cohasset Zoning Bylaw," states the letter. It goes on to say the application and supporting materials "completely ignore the existence of the 200-unit apartment community to be constructed."

According to letter, some of the apartments will be located within 500-feet of the nearest turbine and one of the proposed turbines will stand only 133 feet from Avalon's property line. The turbine is proposed to be 462-feet (141 meters) tall including the blades.

"If that turbine were to fall, it could extend for 329 feet inside Avalon's property," the letter states. According to Avalon building plans, the turbine could fall onto one or more of the Avalon buildings.

Complicating the matter is the wind energy conversion bylaw states "the minimum distance from the base of any wind turbine tower to any property line in a residential district." Since Avalon is a 40-B project, which allows projects to be approved under flexible zoning regulations, the property is still zoned in a technology business district, not residential.

The letter also raises concern with the noise and flicker analysis found in the application.

Sweeney vowed to correct the Avalon oversight, "we will update the proposal to include Avalon."

Wind proponents

In previous public meetings on the project, both with the Planning Board and a public meeting at the library, the Graham Waste wind turbine project had received a warm reception. In the two-hour public hearing session, there were many voices praising the project.

Francis Collins of 404 South Main St. said his fellow residents should take visual impacts with a grain of salt. He offered an example of an unsightly house built in his view that initially he couldn't stand and after two weeks he hardly noticed it.

"My business takes me all over the world and I see wind turbines everywhere I go. We have an opportunity to preserve air quality for future generations…I think we are being very shortsighted," said Collins.

Andrew Willard, chairman of the Alternative Energy Committee (AEC), said he was in favor of this private project and a town-owned turbine on the transfer facility in the future. He and the AEC have been working closely with the turbine developer since August 2005. The AEC is working to strike a deal with the developer to purchase the excess wind energy at a reduced rate to power municipal buildings. Terms would still need to be negotiated, but both Willard and Sweeney have said they are interested in coming to an energy service agreement.

Paul Barry, the owner of the Graham Waste site, said this project is something he believes in.

"The town does have a lot to gain," said Barry, adding as far as residents' concerns about the possibility of lowered property values go "if the landfill didn't hurt, the windmills aren't going to do it. You live with it, it is not offensive…Every project has its group and it's called NIMBY."

Mimi White, a member of the Alternative Energy Committee, said she saw the windmills as a "thing of beauty" and would like to see one, or a few, erected in Cohasset.

A resident of Hull Street with a clear view of Hull Wind II out of his bedroom window said, "I love (the wind turbine), I think it is beautiful."

The Graham Waste wind turbine project public hearing will continue on Monday, Oct. 6 at 7:15p.m.

Disclosure of conflict of interest

Before the applicant began his presentation, two of the Planning Board members had some business to take care of — Chairman Al Moore and member Clark Brewer both disclosed what could potentially be viewed as conflicts of interest, or the appearance of conflict of interest. According to the form filed in the Town Clerk's office, the disclosure is meant to dispel any appearance of conflict of interest.

Moore's business Boston Form LLC operates out of the Brass Kettle building on Chief Justice Cushing Highway. Paul Barry, the same person who owns the Graham Waste land where the turbines will be situated, owns the Brass Kettle building. In addition, Barry is a client of the commercial printing firm.

As a professional architect, Brewer designed several buildings for Graham Waste Services from February 2002 to March 2003.

Sewer, water work has one more year

However, geographically speaking, about two-thirds of the project scope has been covered.

"We've been banging away, ripping up the streets for over a year now," said Water Commission Chairman Glenn Pratt, but more banging and ripping are on the way as the project moves to the main byway of North Main Street and disrupts the area around the Common.

The Deep Run and Rust Way area is the most complete of the project with all major water, sewer and drainage work finished, but the area still has an outstanding punch list of items, such as additional berm work. Nichols Road runs a close second for most complete.

"We are pretty far along, but it did take some time," said Coughlin explaining the delay in paving was partly due to gas main replacement the town had little control over.

In the coming weeks the contractor, LM Holdings, will be concentrating on finishing up work on Atlantic Avenue, Beach Avenue and Jerusalem Road. Then, in the coming months will focus on North Main Street. Residents may have noticed the temporary water pipes on the North Main roadside (from Jerusalem Road to the Common). The contractor will tackle the water main work first with the hope of completing before the winter — and frost — sets in. The remaining sewer piping work will continue throughout the winter months.

"It will be primarily water work (in the beginning) then we'll be mobilizing another crew behind them to begin the sewer work. We're trying to expedite that portion of the project," said LM Holdings project manager Paul Cappelleti. Cappelleti expected to begin working in earnest on North Main next week.

While the most visible portion of the project in on the roads and in the trenches, a major retrofit of Wastewater Treatment Plant on Elm Street is ongoing. At this point, new membranes have been installed in one tank and all work is on schedule for completion in late October.

"All the systems will be proofed out while the contractor (D&C Construction) is still on site," said Coughlin.

Homes could begin tying into town sewer as early as this fall. The Deep Run and Rust Way neighborhoods will be the first to be notified it is okay to tie-in. Residents will need hire a contractor to connect the street stub to the home. But, homes in that area will not be tying into the Cohasset sewer plant, rather they are on the "North Cohasset" system that goes to Hull's wastewater treatment plant.

The rest of the Little Harbor home will have to wait for the work on North Main Street to be complete.

"All the sewer connections from Cunningham Bridge down goes through the North Main connection," said Coughlin. Once complete, the Sewer Commission will notify residents it is okay to tie-in moving from the Common area outward. That means the residences right next to the Deep Run or Rust Way will be the last to tie-in. The Sewer Commission is asking residents to tie-in to the system within 12 months of being notified.

The end goal is to have all 487 homes in the Little Harbor district slated for a town sewer hooked up by 2010. Mandated by the state's Second Amended Judgment, all Little Harbor homes will have to be on town sewer by 2012.

Town Meeting on the horizon

The Water and Sewer Commissions will be coming before Town Meeting in November (date set for Monday, Nov. 17 at 7p.m.) to request funding for an unforeseen project issue. While the major water and sewer work is on budget, an unanticipated infrastructure failure needs to be addressed.

An old retaining wall on Jerusalem Road (shortly before Bow Street) collapsed during construction in that area. A 300-foot section of the 450-foot long wall buckled. The immediate area around the collapse has been stabilized and concrete barriers keep cars away from the wall.

"From a safety perspective, it is something the town needs to address," said Coughlin, but the incident has made him and other engineers on the project suspect of the entire length of wall and other similar retaining walls in the Little Harbor district. The wall is currently stable, but is decades old and does not meet current highway standards, said Coughlin.

If the request passes muster at Town Meeting, the entire Cohasset tax base would pay for the project.

"We're still determining the scope," said Pratt, declining to give an estimate on what the retaining wall could cost. "It will be well discussed in the coming months."

A traffic light has been installed to allow alternating one-way traffic past the collapsed wall area. Bow Street is temporarily one way heading toward the ocean. Pratt said not everyone was for the traffic control light at the wall collapse location, but in the end Fire Chief Robert Silvia said the light would be best for safety reasons.

Project Manager William Needle, right and Project Foreman Cid Gomes watch over one of the many worksites on Fernway last Friday morning.

By the numbers

- 10 miles of new sewer pipe being installed
- 3 miles of water pipe being installed
- 30 LM Holdings construction workers
- 4 LM Holdings project managers
- 7 Field Engineers
- 6-8 police or fire details every day
- 2-3 specialists, testing or marking out utilities
- 10 additional workers when paving is being done
- 3 office staff at the engineering firms

The project has about 50 people working everyday. In addition, there is close oversight for the project by the six members of the Water and Sewer Commissions.

A mother and her child walk past one of the many temporary water mains along North Main Street last Friday morning. Cohasset's biggest water and sewer line project is at its halfway point and will move into the Common area over the coming months.

Little harbor project history

The path to get to this point in the Little Harbor sewer expansion project has been a long and storied. The town sewer expansion to include the Little Harbor district, an addition of 487 homes and 150,000 gallons per day, was mandated by the state through the Second Amended Final Judgment. The agreement goes all the way back to the late 70s, it was handed down by the state as a means of implementing the Clean Waters Act. In 1979, a complaint was filed alleging a violation of the Act, which could have cost the town $10,000 per day in fines. As part of the settlement, the town consented to enter the Judgment.

In 1980, the town and the state agreed on the terms of the Judgment, but it was again amended in 1994 and 1997, when it became the Second Amended Judgment. It was modified again in 1998 and then, in 2006, underwent its final amendment.

As a result of the Judgment, the town embarked on two sewer projects, including an expansion of the Central Sewer District and the North Cohasset sewer project, which allowed residents to tie-in to capacity at the Hull treatment facility.

Little Harbor homeowners will reap the benefit of the sewer expansion but also bear the burden of paying for it. The project timeline should have all homes hooked up to the town sewer by 2011. The homeowners will pay a sewer betterment fee over a twenty-year period.

At the 2007 annual Town Meeting, voters approved a $1 million allocation to devote to drainage improvements for the flood prone district.

The Water and Sewer Commissions worked together to have their infrastructure updates done at the same time.

"We've never before worked together. Part of the reason it was not done in the past was funding was not available at the same," said Pratt. The stars aligned for this project and it broke ground in August 2007.

Sewer Commission Chairman John Beck was quick to acknowledge the patience residents have had over the past year and will continue to have over the next year.

"The patience people have demonstrated in general with the disruption to their streets and neighborhoods is a credit to the community. They have their eye on the end results and they are absorbing all the disturbances in the meantime," said Beck.

Questions about any aspect of the work should be addressed to Kevin McRae, resident engineer for the town's contractor, Coughlin Environmental Services LLC. His office is located in the construction trailer in the staging area on Jerusalem Road. The telephone number for the trailer, which is staffed during normal working hours and voicemail is checked frequently, is 781-383-2900.

Cohasset artists team up at Hingham gallery

Original paintings create new ambiance

By Mary Jane Hanron
CORRESPONDENT

A new piece of artwork can enliven any room especially during these days as staying closer to home gains in popularity. Thanks to artists Tina Watson and Judy St. Peter an opportunity to acquire such a treasure exists right in town at the Hingham Square Gallery.

Watson and St. Peter embarked on their new endeavor earlier this summer when they collaborated with Megan Ullman, owner to create a new ambiance in the South Street storefront while presenting an array of their own original paintings.

"We want the shop to be warm and inviting," said St. Peter. "The atmosphere we are creating will be comfortable for people not only to buy, but to come in and out just to browse. We will be changing things often and adding new pieces so there will always be something different and fun to see."

The works of the two painters gracing the walls of the gallery are eclectic, colorful and diverse. A still life of brilliant red peppers mingles with an elegant scene evocative of World's End. Whimsical images of Chefs and Musicians are interspersed with lovely interpretations of floral arrangements and gardens as well as wildlife, dogs and even a series of roosters. Clusters of small paintings that would revamp a hallway or corner can be found next to a major piece to place above a fireplace or in a bedroom. The resulting atmosphere is one of a sophisticated gallery with a wide appeal that blends pieces that are contemporary, traditional and fun. Prices for the artwork begin at $50.

"It will be great to have a gallery in the square that is upscale and approachable," said St. Peter. "In addition to the selection of paintings, we offer the framing service, too. Some of our works are available with the frame and others are unframed so customers may choose their own."

Hingham Square Gallery owner, Megan Ullman, is flanked by Cohasset artists, Tina Watson (left) and Judy St. Peter (right). Watson and St. Peter are active at the South Shore Art Center and participate in many shows and exhibits. The development of the Hingham Square Gallery as a destination is a natural partnership for them.

The partnership of St. Peter and Watson with Ullman is a dynamic one. Expansion of the Gallery was a logical step for Ullman when the previous occupant, Maggie's Dog Shop moved around the corner to Main Street earlier in the year. During a time when home renovation and improvement is more of a priority for families than travel, a new face for the shop presents an appropriate and welcome experience right in the community.

"This allows people to find a wide selection of quality art similar to that found in places like Newbury Street or the South End without having to make the trip into the city," suggested St. Peter. Both artists are familiar with the Boston art community. St. Peter's work was shown in a Newbury Street Gallery for years. Watson still shows offerings in a South End gallery. "One of my paintings was used in a Bruce Willis film being shot recently in the city," mentioned Watson. "I think I'll keep that one myself!"

The women bring with them to the square substantial backgrounds from the art world as well as roots within the South Shore community.

Watson is no stranger to the "Hollywood experience" in New England. Her family owned the Cohasset Hardware Store for 200 years. "I was around for the "Witches of Eastwick" (1987) and still had the signs used on the store during filming of the movie," she remarked. "They are a part of town history!" She also recalls filming of the 1992 movie, "Housesitter."

A Cohasset native, Watson loves to, "just go outside and paint!" She leads the "Tuesday Painters," a group of artists who gather each Tuesday year round to work on their creations. "I try to find different locations for us. Most recently we went to the Glades." Several of her works in the gallery reflect past locales Watson has found for inspiration including scenes from Hull, Scituate and Nantucket.

The Cohasset Farmers Market occupies Watson on Thursday afternoons through October. "I have been involved there for years," she said. "I sell hot dogs there each week and finally bought myself a little cart!"

St. Peter is passionate about wildlife as well as her pets. Her menagerie consists of a pug, boxer, border collie, five cats, a ferret and a lizard. She speaks of them with adoration and compassion and her interest in animals is evident in her work. Among her noted pieces is a collection of interpretive images of various breeds of dogs.

Watson and St. Peter have known each other within the art community for more than 30 years. They are active in the South Shore Art Center and participate in many shows and exhibits having achieved multiple awards and high recognition. The development of the Hingham Square Gallery as a destination is a natural partnership for them.

"We complement each other and we are both prolific in our painting! This will help us to keep the displays fresh and changing in the Gallery," said St. Peter.

Watson was particularly excited to see the newly created courtyard area behind the gallery. "I love flowers and plants and went right out there to begin some landscaping," she said. The women envision having frequent activities and events at the Gallery as autumn approaches.

"It's such a great setting for families to be out and enjoy the square," said St. Peter. "We believe that art blends beautifully with music and food and socializing. We hope to build on that concept and have this become a destination for a fun afternoon or evening for people on a regular basis. Eventually people from outside the area will hear about us and visit, too.

"We hope the frequently changing displays, the framing service and having activities at the Gallery will make us a regular stop for shoppers!"

A taste of business

Cohasset Young Entrepreneurs finish their second year

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

"They are a very consistent group and they really do it all on their own."
— Michelle Cayer, organizer

They might be young, but they've got creativity, persistence and business savvy. Frequenters of the Farmer's Market have seen them or even purchased their wares.

They are the Cohasset Young Entrepreneurs, a co-op table containing multiple businesses completely owned and operated by kids.

The Cohasset Young Entrepreneurs gets kids engaged in business by giving them an outlet for their product and helping them develop their business. Started by a Cohasset mom, Michelle Cayer, the group meets several times throughout the year to discuss their businesses.

"I just always wanted to start a young entrepreneurs group," says Cayer. When she left her career last year, she figured it was the perfect time to start one up. At the meetings over the winter, the kids learned how to create a logo, how to successfully brand their company and the basics of business. They learned it was smart to invest a portion of their profits back into the business.

"They are a very consistent group and they really do it all on their own," says Cayer. There are about 10 companies in all and business owners' ages range from six to 12.

On a recent Thursday, the Mariner caught up with each of the young entrepreneurs to find out a little bit about their businesses.

As the Young Entrepreneurs wind down another year at the Farmer's Market, they are looking to continue developing their business over the winter. Cayer would love to have the group visit a corporate environment on a field trip or have a business owner come speak to the group. Local entrepreneurs interesting in hosting the group or kids interested in becoming a young entrepreneur should contact Cayer at michelle.cayer@bt.com.

"It is not about us, we want the kids to want to do it and follow through on it," says Cayer.

Three of the young entrepreneur businesses were not at the Thursday, Sept. 4 Farmer's Market when the Mariner caught up with the group: Cassandra Lieberman of Cohasset Gems, Alexa Bleicken of Cohasset Goodies and Bennet Tierney and Kyle Burke of Back at the Beach Jewelry.

"It's a Chick Thing" owners Taylor Frederick and Meredith Corry show off their wares.

It's A Chick Thing

Owners: Taylor Frederick and Meredith Corry.

Age and grade: 11, sixth grade.

Business: It's A Chick Thing.

Product and prices: Light switch covers ($3), button ponytail holders ($2) and fabric covered ponytail holders ($3), bracelets ($8) and rubber duckies ($3).

Years in business: Two years.

Typical customer: Parents with younger kids.

Why this business: "We were bored in the summer and wanted to make some money. This is something fun to do," says Taylor. Last year, they concentrated on the hair elastics, but expanded this year to offer the popular light switch covers. "People like to wear the hair elastics and they are fun to make," says Taylor. They use their own sense of taste to pick out the fabrics and buttons to use in their selection of hair elastics. Their newest product of light switch covers are decorated with photos they know will be popular like, "High School Musical," the Jonas Brothers and horses.

What do you love about the Farmer's Market: "It's a fun place to be, we get to see our friends here," says Meredith.

Fun fact about the business: Both Taylor and Meredith would like to own their own business when they are older.

Abigail Campbell has hand sewn bags and dolls.

Abigail's Bag Company

Owner: Abigail Campbell.

Age and grade: 12, sixth grade.

Business: Abigail's Bag Company.

Product: Handmade reversible bags (large and small), sparkle pencils and "scary" dolls.

Price: $12.99 for large bag (special Farmer's Market price), $4.99 for small bag; a quarter for a sparkle pencil.

Years in business: First year at Cohasset Farmer's Market.

Typical customer: Everyone. Little kids go for the scary dolls and sparkle pencils and adults love the bags.

Why this business: Abigail loves doing crafts. She took sewing classes and the bags were the first project. After she gave one of her bag creations to her teacher, her friends asked for one, too. Abigail's Bag Company was born. She expanded to the "scary" dolls (which are actually rather cute) when she saw something similar for sale at Newbury Comics.

What do you love about the Farmer's Market: "It's really fun to come here and sell things, especially because (what I make) makes some people happy."

Fun fact about the business: Abigail loves to do bags in bright colors, but she also does custom bags in her customer's favorite colors. She even has her own business card and website:

(http://www.freewebs.com/abbydabbyo)

Ellie Jackisch and Abby Thomas design, paint and sell their own canvas bags.

It's In The Bag

Owners: Ellie Jackisch and Abby Thomas.

Age and grade: 9, fourth grade.

Business: It's In The Bag.

Product: Hand-painted canvas tote bags.

Prices: One for $8, two for $15, three or more for $6 each.

Years in business: First year in this business.

Typical customer: Grown-ups.

Why this business: "We didn't want to use plastic bags…a lot of people who use plastic bags end up littering," says Abby. So, they began painting plain khaki-colored canvas bags with fruits, vegetables, starfish, sand dollars and other seashore images and selling them to other eco-minded individuals at the Farmer's Market. Each week they debut new designs.

What do you love about the Farmer's Market: "There is music to listen to and friends to spend time with. It's a good summer event," says Ellie.

Fun fact about the business: The bags can be used for anything you need to carry. They recommend buying a bag with a sailboat to carry things while boating or bringing one with a fruit on it to the grocery store.

Age and grade: 7, second grade.

Business: Yet to be named.

Product: Packets of Pokemon cards.

Prices: $1 for a pack of five cards.

Years in business: One year.

Typical customer: Kids.

Why this business: A fan of Pokemon, Chris had accumulated quite a collection of cards, but many of them were duplicates. Seeing his sister (Marina) at the Farmer's Market, he wanted to do it too, but with his own idea. He decided it would be a good idea to try to start a business selling the cards he had multiples of. Next year, he is hoping to expand his business to sell baseball cards.

Fun fact about the business: In his best week, he sold $13 worth of Pokemon cards.

Jay Frederick of Jay's General Store has a variety of items for sale.

Jay's General Store

Years in business: Two years.

Typical customer: Kids.

Why this business: He really wanted to start a business and make money. When he saw the products he currently has online, he thought a lot of kids would like them. He was right. In a single afternoon, he can make as much as $15.

What do you love about the Farmer's Market: "Lots of my friends are here and I like to look around and see what's here."

Fun fact about the business: Jay will personally engrave a dog tag on the spot with a special engraving pen.

Soap by the Sea Shore

Owner: Dulaney Bernstein.

Age and grade: 9, fourth grade.

Business: Soap by the Sea Shore.

Product: Handmade glycerin soap.

Prices: Three small soaps, $1.50; one large soap, $2

Years in business: Two years.

Typical customer: Grown-ups.

Why this business: Dulaney received a soap making kit for Christmas two years ago and the following summer she began to sell the soaps at the Farmer's Market. Like her business name implies, many of her soaps have a marine theme with seashell molds or a dolphin toy embedded in the bigger soaps. "There's a big ocean theme…I'm really interested in learning about the ocean."

What do you love about the Farmer's Market: "I love that a lot of people start companies, I felt really inspired to start my own."

Fun fact about the business: Dulaney experiments with colors, scents and molds each week when she makes the soaps. "You get to be creative…it's like cooking!"

Marina Longo owns Cool Clips, a hair accessory and backpack clip business.

Cool Clips

Owner: Marina Longo.

Age and grade: 9, fourth grade.

Business: Cool Clips.

Product: Beaded hair jewelry and backpack clips; custom designs and off the rack.

Prices: $2 each, three for $5.

Years in business: Two years.

Typical customer: Girls.

Why this business: Two years ago, she was playing with beads and had an epiphany — "if you put a clip on (the end) you could wear the beads in your hair." She expanded her product line to include the backpack clip (beaded strings kids attach to the zippers of their backpack) after she noticed boys were coming up to the table with their sisters looking like they wanted something, too.

What do you love about the Farmer's Market: "It's local and a good place for people to stop…it is my favorite place to be on Thursday afternoon."

Fun fact about the business: She changes up the bead colors in the clips depending on the season. This fall, she is offering a lot of yellow, oranges and metallics. Yet, she does have a best seller — "anything pink and purple is gone by the time I go home."

Facilities depart. needs are growing

HVAC specialist on wish list

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

"We don't have the manpower or personnel to do preventative maintenance."
— Brian Adams, facilities manager

Keeping Cohasset's town facilities in top shape year round is no easy job and Facility Manager Brian Adams and his two employees are up to the challenge. Yet, Adams said they are currently struggling to keep up with amount of work on their plate.

Adams met with the Selectmen to give an overview of the facilities management department, which maintains all the town's buildings. The presentation is part of an ongoing effort to have the Selectmen meet with each department head over the last few months to report on the trends, major challenges, grant opportunities and generally give a "big picture" perspective of their department.

"In the last three or four years we have made great strides in building the department," said Adams. Facility management formerly fell under the Department of Public Works (DPW) and the school department. "There is a continuing need to make progress."

Because the vast majority of square footage in the town, approximately 400,000 square feet, is school buildings, the Facilities Management department spends most of its time split between those three buildings. His department's purview extends to the buildings and the buildings' envelopes with some additional exceptions (parking lot lighting, etc.) Adams said most of the work the department focuses on is corrective maintenance.

"We don't have the manpower or personnel to do preventative maintenance," said Adams. To grow his department and really take care of the buildings in the manner he feels is necessary, Adams said the addition of an administrative assistant and a HVAC (which stands for heating, ventilating and air conditioning) specialist would free up 85 percent of his time.

Currently, Adams does not have time to work on projects like developing a capital budget requests, utility tracking, building renovations, grants instead he has to devote time to payroll, vacation tracking and routine maintenance.

"It is not the best way for the town to spend their money (to pay me to do these things)," said Adams.

He estimated the cost of a person with HVAC specialty would run the town between $60,000 and $65,000. Selectman Ralph Dormitzer asked if a HVAC specialist was hired if his/her work could save the town money in energy costs to offset his/her salary.

"I'd be willing to bet (the savings) would be enough to pay for a salary," said Adams. Through monitoring classroom temperatures, listening to complaints then responding accordingly and properly maintaining the heating and cooling systems, the HVAC specialist could save the town considerable energy cost, he said. A smaller budget for outside contract HVAC work would still be needed. That line item is currently between $50,000 and $60,000.

Selectman Paul Carlson said oftentimes money spent on preventative maintenance can save thousands of dollars down the line in corrective maintenance. Adams agreed, but said it is often a hard sell because the work isn't as visible as corrective maintenance.

"It is important to keep our buildings in tip top shape," said Carlson.

"I agree 100 percent," said Adams.

In the state primary, voters must vote for candidates on the ballot of the party under which they are currently registered. Unenrolled voters may take either ballot and automatically go back to unenrolled status following the election.

According to the Elections Division statewide, they are looking at a 20 percent turnout, Douglas said.

As of Monday, 18 voters had returned absentee ballots for the state primary. But, most of the requests for absentee ballots have been for the November election.

In 2004, the fall primary had a historic low turnout with only 241, or 4.6 percent, of the town's registered voters going to the polls. That election boasted the lowest turnout since at least 1978, according to Mariner archives. That primary was similar in that only the Democratic ballot had races (for councillor, register of deeds and county commissioner).

According to the Mariner archive, another all-time low turnout occurred in the Sept. 15, 1988 primary when only 371 voters or 7.8 percent went to the polls in Cohasset.

The turnout for this primary will likely pale in comparison to the expected numbers on Election Day, Tuesday, Nov. 4 when the nation will choose a new president. According to Douglas, the state is predicting a 90 percent turnout of registered voters on that day.

Of the Cohasset's 5,193 registered voters, 1,157 are registered Democrats; 1,176 are registered Republicans; two are green-rainbow; one is working family and 2,851 are unenrolled. Voters registered to the libertarian or reform parties are not eligible to vote in this state primary (Cohasset has five libertarians and one reform voter).

In the state primary, voters must vote for candidates on the ballot of the party under which they are currently registered. Unenrolled voters may take either ballot and automatically go back to unenrolled status following the election.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Save the boats!

Tough times are everywhere, including the financial picture at the MBTA.

Last Thursday (Sept. 4), the MBTA published a "public notice" informing commuter boat riders about two community workshops to review the agency's preliminary 2008 service plan proposals to eliminate the last round trip and reduce or eliminate service on certain holidays on the Hingham/Boston Commuter Boat and to reduce off-peak trips on weekdays and weekends for the Quincy/Hull/Boston/Logan Commuter Boat.

For the Hingham service this would mean eliminating the 7:40 p.m. trip from Hingham Shipyard and the 8:30 p.m. trip from Rowe's Wharf. It is also proposed there be no service on Martin Luther King Day and Presidents Day. A reduced holiday schedule is proposed for Patriot's Day, Columbus Day, Veterans Day and the day after Thanksgiving.

One of the workshops was held Wednesday night in Quincy after the Cohasset Mariner went to press.

The second workshop is slated for 6-7:30 p.m. Monday (Sept. 15) at the Abigail Adams Middle School Auditorium, 89 Middle St., Weymouth.

Written feedback on the plan will be accepted through Sept. 30.

Here at the Mariner, we have supported restoration of Greenbush service, which has been up and running for nearly a year.

However, we have also supported the continuation of a vibrant commuter boat service and think cutting back on that service is a bad idea.

The commuter boats have staunch advocates in our local legislators: state Rep. Garrett Bradley and state Sen. Robert Hedlund.

Both men opposed Greenbush, largely due to its exorbitant cost and its environmental impacts.

Many commuter boat enthusiasts will no doubt say "I told you so." Many commuters warned that local train service could spell reduction or even the demise of commuter boats.

However, this is not the time to reopen the "train debate." The train is here and more people need to use it!

Also, more people need to ride the commuter boats!

Gasoline prices are high and could go higher.

Public transportation needs to be encouraged not discouraged.

More cars need to come off the road – for the sake of the planet and our pocketbooks.

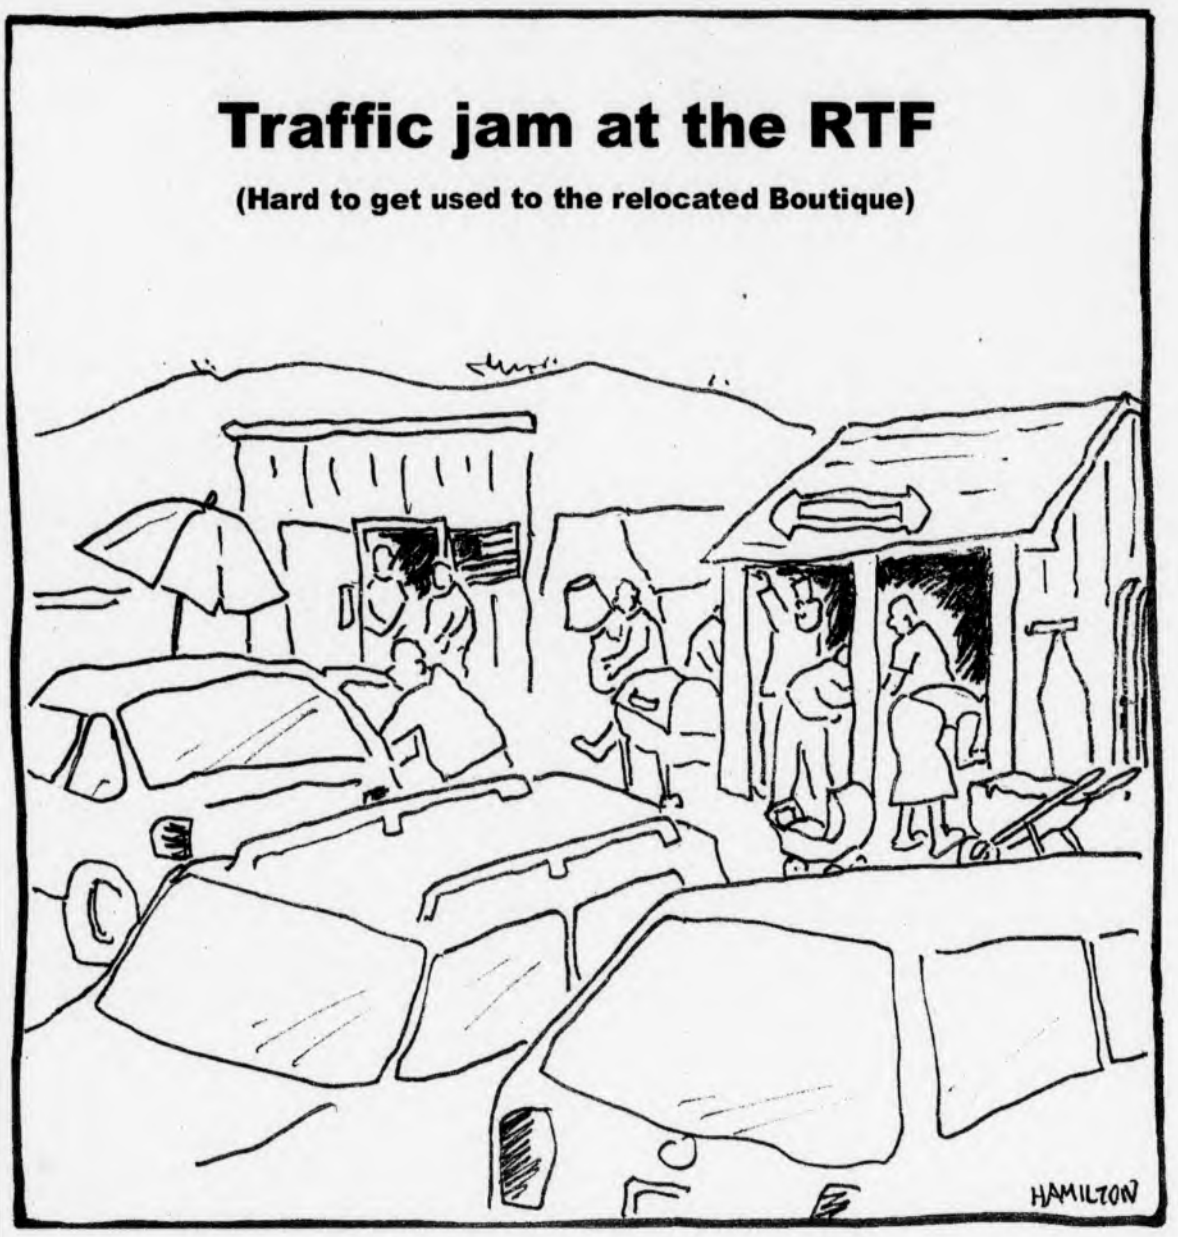
We do not have the answer in terms of what the MBTA needs to do to get its costs/expenses/revenue picture under control.

But cutting service should be off the table. If anything, the MBTA should be offering incentives for people to use public transportation.

If any of our readers have not tried the commuter boat, we urge them to do so. It is a very pleasant, convenient way to travel to Boston.

Please attend Monday's workshop in Weymouth and send a "loud and clear" message to the MBTA: do not cut boat service!

Rep. Bradley put it best: "My fear is that they're starting to chip away at overall boat service."



It is time for an overhaul at the MBTA. They need some creative, forward-looking thinkers. Massachusetts needs a viable, multi-faceted public transportation system that also includes commuter boats.

Join the debate and take our on line poll!

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Planning board commended for well-run meeting

TO THE EDITOR:

I want to commend and thank the planning board for a well-run meeting on the discussion around the wind turbines proposed for the Graham Waste site. Chairman Moore did a nice job of keeping the focus on the factual issues rather than a debate on the merits of wind power. It was clear from the developer presentation and thoughtful questions from the board and audience that there are many unresolved issues around the economic, noise, health, visual, safety, environmental, engineering, and other aspects of the project that require substantially more research and discussion.

While many in town may have assumed this project was a pre-wired "done deal," the board and the town engineer seemed open to exploring all the relevant facts and potential impacts. Many more meetings, forums, and debates are sure to follow, and all of Cohasset should get involved. A project of this scale, precedent, and controversy deserves nothing less.

Heartfelt gratitude

TO THE EDITOR:

To Our Friends and Neighbors:

We are deeply grateful for the prayers, incredible gestures (both large and small), best wishes and encouragement from so many of you. In late August, our son Derek was seriously injured during a CHS football scrimmage, and it quickly became apparent that the injury was far more extensive than originally diagnosed. Two weeks later, with the help of some remarkable doctors and the nursing staff at Children's Hospital, he's doing well and hoping for a full recovery. During his 10-day stay, Derek's hospital room was full of friends, their parents, his coaches, well wishes and encouragement from people all across Cohasset.

Like all of you, we've read the letters to the editor from grateful families acknowledging the friendship and support that helped them through difficult times. It never occurred to us that we would write a letter like this ourselves.

It doesn't nearly cover it, but from the bottom of our hearts, thank you.

The Schwantner Family

Pockets of beauty praised

TO THE EDITOR:

On behalf of the Community Garden Club of Cohasset, I would like to commend the wonderful people who have provided the town with the tastefully planted road dividers and triangles. These good neighbors planned, planted, and maintained the flowers that add such life and charm to our roads.

The islands near grade crossings include the Pond Street crossing, planted by Mark Remlinger; lower King Street (3A side), Peter Laugelle; lower King Street (North Main side), Wayne Robbins; Forest and North Main, Trish Morse and Dick Avery; and North Main at Cohasset Golf Club, the Club (waiting until construction work completed). Our town manager, Bill Griffin, notes that two crossings are awaiting adoption: Sohier Street crossing and Beechwood Street crossing. Anyone interested in doing so, please email him at wgriffin@townofcohasset.org.

We would also like to applaud the lovely planting in the horse trough at Beach Street and Atlantic Avenue, courtesy of Ginger King, Nancy Sandell, Carmen Schramm and Jennifer Willms from the Cohasset Garden Club. That club has also designed and maintained the charming garden at the Captain John Wilson House and the Bates Ship Chandlery-Maritime Museum.

At Beechwood, Joan Brown and Mary Ward are responsible for the three round planters in front of the ballpark, and Kelley and Jack Nash are to be thanked for the planting at the Beechwood and King Street intersection.

Despite our best efforts, we are sure that we have missed several people who should be mentioned. We would very much like to know who they are so that we can give them the credit they deserve. Again, if you would like to adopt a town space for next season, please contact Bill Griffin.

Thanks to all of you for adding these pockets of beauty and color, especially during this time of infrastructure upgrades.

Little to inspire confidence in turbine project

COMMENTARY

JEFFREY PATTERSON

As residents of 10 Sanctuary Pond Road, probably the closest single-family home to the proposed site of the new Graham Waste wind turbine project, my wife, two daughters, and I are closely following the consideration of the proposed project. Based on the serious and potentially drastic impact the wind turbines will have on our home in terms of noise, flicker, strobe, and shadow effect, we are understandably concerned. In fact, as my daughter states, the whole situation is "scary." Based on what was presented at Monday's hearing, this fear and concern should be shared by many Town residents.

At the hearing, a number of facts became clear.

First, there is currently NO agreement in place that requires the Town to receive ANY benefit from the project.

Second, the only "experts" who reviewed the project were selected and paid by the developer and they have NEVER analyzed and presented another wind project for public permit.

Third, the "experts" have conducted NO investigation of actual turbines to determine noise, flicker, visual, and shadow effect. Instead, they simply plugged numbers into a hypothetical computer model.

Fourth, the reason the "experts" have no real-life experience or analysis to support their "guess-timates" is turbines of this enor-

'Why does construction take so long?'

MAKING TRACKS

TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN

Little Harbor Project – Very often we get calls about various construction projects around Town. One of the questions we are often asked is, "Why does construction take so long?" In fact, there are so many variables that it is tough to be specific. Weather is always a serious factor. Some say that one day of rain sets a project back two days — one for the rain delay, one to correct the things that a rainfall ruined. Unplanned events are also quite an important factor. This week we had a really good example of an unplanned event. While the contractor was removing the asphalt in Jerusalem Road, for the new water main, they ended up breaking a Comcast cable line. But that line was actually buried in the asphalt of the road surface — not even below the road. It was in the road surface! Buried equipment (power lines, cable lines, water lines) are OK as long as they follow the rules — but, not in the surface of the road.

When the project finds unexpected situations like this the work is delayed until Comcast can figure out what to do.

The traffic light system has been installed on Jerusalem Road to permit regulated two-way traffic around the wall problem on the downhill portion when traveling from Main Street to Bow Street. A small problem did develop and the lights had to be readjusted a tad. It seemed that the light cycles that were set initially did not allow enough time for a fully loaded truck to start from rest at the bottom of the hill and make it safely to the top before the opposing traffic was sent down the hill. Obviously, "this is not a good thing," as Martha Stewart would say! We'll keep an eye on the traffic flow and make other adjustments as warranted. If you have comments about this light, please let us know.

As we go to press we are working on the possibility of relocating the light near Bow Street. Practice has shown us that we'd be better off with the stoplight on a flat surface, rather than on a hill. This will make traffic safety substantially better this winter when the roads become slippery.

Greenbush – Well, best laid plans of mice and men oft go astray…This past week we were all set to get a new catch basin installed in the Town Parking Lot on Monday, followed by paving on this past Tuesday. And POOF, there went the plans. There was a problem with other underground utilities so the catch basin could not be installed in the parking lot driveway on Monday. And, the rains came, so paving had to be curtailed before it was completed. As of now, several of the spots were paved and the area adjacent to the Teen Center was paved with its final coat. As of now, the catch basin will be installed on Monday, Sept. 15th. We don't have a schedule date for finishing the paving, but CBB has assured us that it will be done quickly. Then, we'll finally be ready for striping. That will be a glorious day for the Town Parking Lot users.

Storm Water cleanup – We have spoken about the storm water devices being installed at Cushing and Norfolk roads as well as at Pond and Spring streets. Now there is a "new guy" being installed adjacent to St. Anthony's on S. Main Street. This clean-up device performs similarly to all of the other devices, yet it looks very different. If you remember from previous articles, these devices all clean up the first rain that comes off of the streets with all of the "nasties" and cleans them by passing them through plant/soil field before they are released to the regular storm-drain system. At this site a large concrete box has been placed in the ground with a slit in its side open to the street. Rainwater flows through the slit into the box and is cleaned up by special soils in which is planted a tree. (The tree will be planted in the box shortly.) After clean up the storm water drains out through a pipe in the bottom of the box to a near-by storm drain. With a large rain, water merely bypasses by this device and goes into the near-by storm drain.

The drawing shows a cross section of the box. For the purposes of illustration we have shown where the ground level is as well as where the tree will be planted. The excess water leaves via the pipe shown in the lower right and is directed to the adjacent catch basin.

Extra paving work – We have been asked by the Water Department to manage the final paving on several streets where they installed new pipes last year. This current week we will start this work by grinding sections of Church, Doane, Beechwood, and South Main in that order. The paving will follow in about two weeks. Please be very careful, since the rough roads will be around for these two weeks. This work also ties in with the Little Harbor Project (but is NOT being paid for by that project). But, by combining this paving with paving from the Little Harbor Project we can amass the necessary volume of paving to get the pavers into Cohasset earlier that we otherwise would be able to do.

Only tornado on South Shore

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

We've all grown familiar with hurricanes, floods, droughts, tornados — all sorts of natural disasters in recent weeks, but there are not many of us alive today who remember the South Weymouth tornado of 1920.

True, it wasn't the equal of the Worcester tornado of 1953 or a Nebraska tornado of most any year and no one was killed or injured but it did $100,000 damage at a time when that was more than pocket change for most folks.

And, to my knowledge, it was the only time a tornado ever visited the South Shore.

It started on Tuesday, Aug. 31, at 4:15 in the afternoon during a thunderstorm at the base of the Blue Hills in Braintree and cut a 500-foot wide swath across Randolph, Holbrook and Weymouth before vanishing in Hingham.

But the heaviest damage was in South Weymouth and the weekly Weymouth Gazette & Transcript recorded it in excruciating detail, starting with the demolition of Adolph Barth's outhouse on Forest Street.

Dr. E. E. Taylor's estate on Main Street suffered $3,000 damage, including his new hen house with 20 hens and a sleigh that was blown onto the property of William Holbrook.

Mrs. Alfred Torrey's barns, sheds and part of the house on Pleasant Street were demolished and a wagon and grindstone were found in a tree.

John Ronan's house at 200 Park Ave. was moved fully six feet off its foundation and was thought to be a total loss with the chimney falling through the roof and the cement floor of the porch broken up.

Olaf Peterson's barn was demolished, killing nine pigs, and three hen houses, recently built for $300, were blown away, taking with it some 300 hens. Peterson's losses were so severe that sightseers began passing the hat for him.

Everywhere chimneys were blown down, windows smashed, trees uprooted, roofs and shingles torn off and Harry Poole's orchard on Pleasant Street was destroyed and his pigeons escaped.

There was no FEMA or MEMA or a governor to declare an emergency in those days so the people of South Weymouth handled their recovery as they had done for generations. They did it themselves.

Three weeks after the tornado, a field day netted $3,000 for the benefit of those who suffered the most and a souvenir booklet was printed and sold. (I wonder if any of them exist today, long forgotten in some Weymouth attic.)

The ladies of the Old South Union Church made and sold nearly 400 doughnuts and coffee, the Baptist Church women sold many gallons of ice cream and the ladies of Trinity Church hustled their pies.

Mrs. Orcutt closed her store near the depot and sold confectionary. The Lovell's Corner Improvement Society sold cake, fruit and vegetables and the Fore River Band and the Navy Yard Band entertained.

Congressman Olney dropped by and spoke to the crowd — "briefly," according to the Gazette & Transcript — and John Fitzgerald, the former mayor of Boston, showed up to sing "Sweet Adeline."

The South Weymouth Tornado of 1920 was history.

DRIVING WHILE TYPING

JOHN LENGYEL

I'm always so flattered when people compliment my writing.

"You have a really odd sense of humor," they say.

"Thanks!" I say.

"And your articles aren't overlong. I think that's best for everyone."

"Thanks!" I say.

I'm gratified by these comments, but I worry too. I won't be around forever, and when I'm gone, who will take over my work? None of my kids is particularly funny. The other morning my youngest daughter tried to wake me by tapping my forehead with a hot dog, but I did not find that funny. My middle daughter thinks telling a joke means quoting a line you've never heard from a TV show you've never seen. And my oldest — well let's just say she makes Sinbad Junior and Salty the Parrot look like Smith and Dale!

Clearly my family is not going to step up when the time comes for me to hang up my pen, and according to my wife that time is coming sooner than anyone suspects. So although I hate to spoil the magic, I think my only option is to reveal the writing secrets the humorist community doesn't want the general public to know, in hopes that one of you will be inspired to contribute a column of your own to the Mariner some day. So where do you start? Let's find out!

The first and most important step is the procrastination. That's where you'll spend the bulk of your time. The Internet can help, and long showers, and eating up Halloween candy you bought in mid-September, foolishly imagining that you were stocking up early. But you will inevitably run out of ideas —it's the nature of the creative process and you can't beat yourself up over it. Procrastinator's Block is something all writers deal with from time to time, but what distinguishes a real artist from a hack is the innovative spirit he brings to the avoidance of writing. Earnest Hemingway, Mariel Hemingway's grandfather, was a writer famous for his procrastination methods, which often involved participating in World Wars and trying to kill himself. I certainly don't recommend going that far, but when you have a deadline looming and all the miniature golf courses in your area are closed for the winter, you'll understand why joining the Navy can be tempting.

This first phase of work should take you right up to the night before your article is due. The next step is to think of something lighthearted to write about, which can be difficult when you're having a nervous breakdown. You may get so desperate that you decide to write about the writing process itself, but for dignity's sake you must back away from the edge of this precipice and start over. There are many, many other interesting things to write about at any given time — far too many to list here I'm afraid.

Once you've settled on a topic that doesn't feed on itself like some grotesque snake bent on swallowing its own tail, it's time to add the laughs. The key is to remember the three cardinal rules of comedy:

1) Any subject can be made funny except hot dogs that wake you out of a sound sleep for goodness sake.

2) The best jokes often rely on a surprise, first building an expectation and then defying that expectation. For example you might begin a statement in a deadpan tone that doesn't suggest a punch line is coming, and then simply continue in that vein and complete the statement without a payoff.

3) Assume your audience is sophisticated. Don't insult their intelligence by using terms like "elephant bums," "mastodon booty," or "pachyderm butts."

The last step is to write a final paragraph that awkwardly returns to your initial theme, which was introduced with good intentions but soon abandoned in favor of silly digressions and poor excuses to write things like "hippo hineys" in a newspaper.

John Lengyel lives in Cohasset. A representative from the humorist community paid him an angry visit this afternoon, jump-starting his latent fear of evil clowns.

He moved to Cohasset in June 2007 and jumped head first into the community. His ears perked up at the discussion last summer about the village zoning bylaws.

"It was striking to me as quaint and very beautiful the village is, it was sleeping," said Pinel. "I thought it was kind of sad."

In August 2007, he wrote a commentary to the Mariner about what he saw as the special and unique characteristics of Cohasset — the sea and the art scene. In November, he spoke at Town Meeting. And by December, he had been recruited to the Economic Development Committee, just when the committee was looking to re-vamp and re-focus its charter.

When he saw the draft charter, he immediately said, "we have to go well beyond that." Inspiration came to him by recalling the grand town-wide celebrations of his youth in France.

"When we have a celebration, it is a true celebration," says Pinel. He knew one thing for sure, he wanted to have the event go into the evening.

"People let their hair down in the evening…going (into the night) makes the event not merely games, shopping, fashion shows…its music and food and people celebrating themselves and having fun. I think it's wonderful, I really do," says Pinel.

Months in the making, Cohasset Day is an initiative of the Economic Development Committee in partnership with the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce.

The Cohasset Day festivities begin at 1p.m. and will continue, just like Pinel envisioned, into the evening (8p.m.). The afternoon will have games, a mini-triathlon and parades for kids. The First Annual Classic Car Concours will make its way to the village and about 20 rare automobiles will be on display in the village (South Main Street) from 2 to 3p.m. Local musicians will play throughout the afternoon and there will be a Cohasset Carillon "sing along" at 4:10p.m. Local restaurant and food purveyors will cook up some of their best recipes for sampling from 4 to 7p.m. at the "Fine Food Galore" on South Main Street. (See sidebar for complete schedule of events.)

While Pinel may have been the visionary behind Cohasset Day, it has taken the hard work of many individuals to make the event a reality. The five-member EDC board has lent its expertise and enlisted many residents to help. The members of the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce have worked closely with the EDC to put together the event.

"Our role is to help Cohasset be the best it can be. One way to enhance the viability of the village and the downtown is to ensure the merchants are thriving and being supported by the people in and out of town," says EDC Chairman Peter Brown.

The organizers are hoping and praying for a picture perfect Cohasset fall day for the event.

"It is not about us, it is about Cohasset. Cohasset as such is going to have a great time and be proud," says Pinel.

SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The board has always maintained that the principal agent for managing your health is you.

Cohasset Heath Fair will take place from 1 to 5 p.m., on Tuesday, Sept. 16. All Cohasset residents are welcome.

Probably one of the most important and comprehensive events the Board of Health has put on will be this year's Health Fair. Each year we sponsor an event in which a great variety of health, fitness, personal care professionals and advisers gather to provide free of charge advice, assistance and counseling for the citizens of Cohasset. In general, those who will be gathered at the Second Congregational Church in Bates Hall this year are dedicated to providing help. No high pressure or fancy displays and advertising; just plenty of ideas that may improve your personal situation.

Little to inspire confidence in turbine project

COMMENTARY

JEFFREY PATTERSON

...it was reassuring to hear the Town Engineer and Planning Board members express their commitment to obtaining truly independent and qualified expert information for public review and consideration before any decision is made.

FROM TURBINE, PAGE 10

mity have never been used in New England before. For comparison, the proposed Cohasset turbines are 50 to 60 percent larger than the turbines used in Hull.

Fifth, the project does NOT comply with recognized safety guidelines and placement recommendations created by even pro-wind industry and pro-wind advocacy groups like General Electric and the American Wind Energy Association.

Sixth, the project proponent is considering the use of turbines in Cohasset, which are more than two years old and no longer under warranty or service agreement. (These same turbines were rejected by voters in Orleans, Mass.)

Seventh, despite the fact that Zoning By-Laws require the project proponent to minimize the visual, flicker, and noise impact of any proposed turbine project, the project proponent has failed to even consider or analyze the possibility of using smaller turbines or placing them on the property farther from residences and commercial property.

In sum, there was little in Monday's meeting to inspire confidence in the project, the project proponent, or the project experts. However, it was reassuring to hear the Town Engineer and Planning Board members express their commitment to obtaining truly independent and qualified expert information for public review and consideration before any decision is made. As this is the first turbine project considered under the Town's Zoning By-Laws, it will set a precedent for all future wind turbine projects in town. What happens at Graham Waste today will set the rules for the Transfer Station tomorrow. And what happens there tomorrow will set an undeniable precedent for what the Town must allow on the coast and off-shore in the future. For that reason, before approving any wind turbine project, the Town and the Board should demand that any project be subject to independent, experienced, qualified expert review to determine if the project is safe and if it will actually provide any demonstrable benefit to the Town in terms of energy and cost savings.

No open meeting violation, DA says

In early August, the Mariner filed an Open Meeting Law compliant against the School Committee alleging an inappropriate use of executive session. The Norfolk County District Attorney has ruled there was no violation.

On June 18, the School Committee went into executive session for two purposes: one, to discuss strategy with respect to collective bargaining matters and two, to discuss non-union contract personnel. According to the minutes from the executive session, the committee discussed negotiations relating to the cafeteria workers contract and then a second item concerning a revised contract with a non-union employee, the Food Service Director.

Lastly, according to the minutes, the committee instructed the Superintendent of Schools to cover the existing deficit in food services with operational budget money available prior to the close of fiscal 2008. It was the Mariner's belief this last item discussed in the executive session constituted a violation of the Open Meeting Law and should have been discussed in open session.

The School Committee discussed the food services deficit at meeting throughout 2008. The schools had hired a consultant to devise strategies to increase participation and profits for the school lunch program.

According to the School Committee's response to the complaint (prepared by Superintendent of Schools Denise Walsh) the School Committee asserted the background information regarding the current food services deficit was a necessary part of the discussion and it was only discussed as it related to the negotiation of the Food Service Director's contract and the cafeteria workers collective bargaining.

The School Committee addressed the complaint publicly at its meeting Aug. 27.

Assistant District Attorney Varsha Kukafka reviewed the complaint and the School Committee's response before ruling there was no violation. She found credible that the food service deficit was a necessary part of the discussions relating to the negotiations.

"Furthermore, there was no vote taken in executive session regarding the food service deficit, although the minutes state that the School Committee instructed the Superintendent to cover the existing food service deficit with operational budget money available prior to close of fiscal year 2008. In any event, at the School Committee meeting five days later (June 23), there was open discussion on the food service deficit," states the ruling from the DA.

At the June 23 meeting, the School Committee voted to cover the food service deficit (and other budget line deficits). The food service deficit was $47,212.

"So even if discussion of the food service deficit did not fall within the exemption and should not have been discussed in executive session, any technical violation was cured by the subsequent discussion in open session," the ruling states. "This office finds no violation of the Open Meeting Law."

Wild win against Presidents

Offense clicks on all cylinders in opener

By Joel Racicot
JRACICOT@CNC.COM

Emotions ran high long before Cohasset knocked off Quincy 28-27 in overtime Friday night on the road. When Cohasset head coach Pete Afanasiw ran into the locker room to grab a medical kit for the sidelines before the game, he could here a loud cheer from his players outside on the field.

That's because CHS senior Derek Schwantner was standing on the sidelines after suffering a potentially life threatening throat injury during a pre-season scrimmage.

"He was out of the hospital at 2 o'clock and in my office at 3 o'clock, I couldn't believe he was there," said Afanasiw. "It was just awesome to have him on the sidelines."

That unexpected boost was the start of what turned out to be a very exciting opener for Cohasset. Trailing 27-20 in overtime, running back Dana Valentine scored on a 6-yard scamper to answer the Presidents initial score in the extra frame. Down by one on the road, Cohasset went for two.

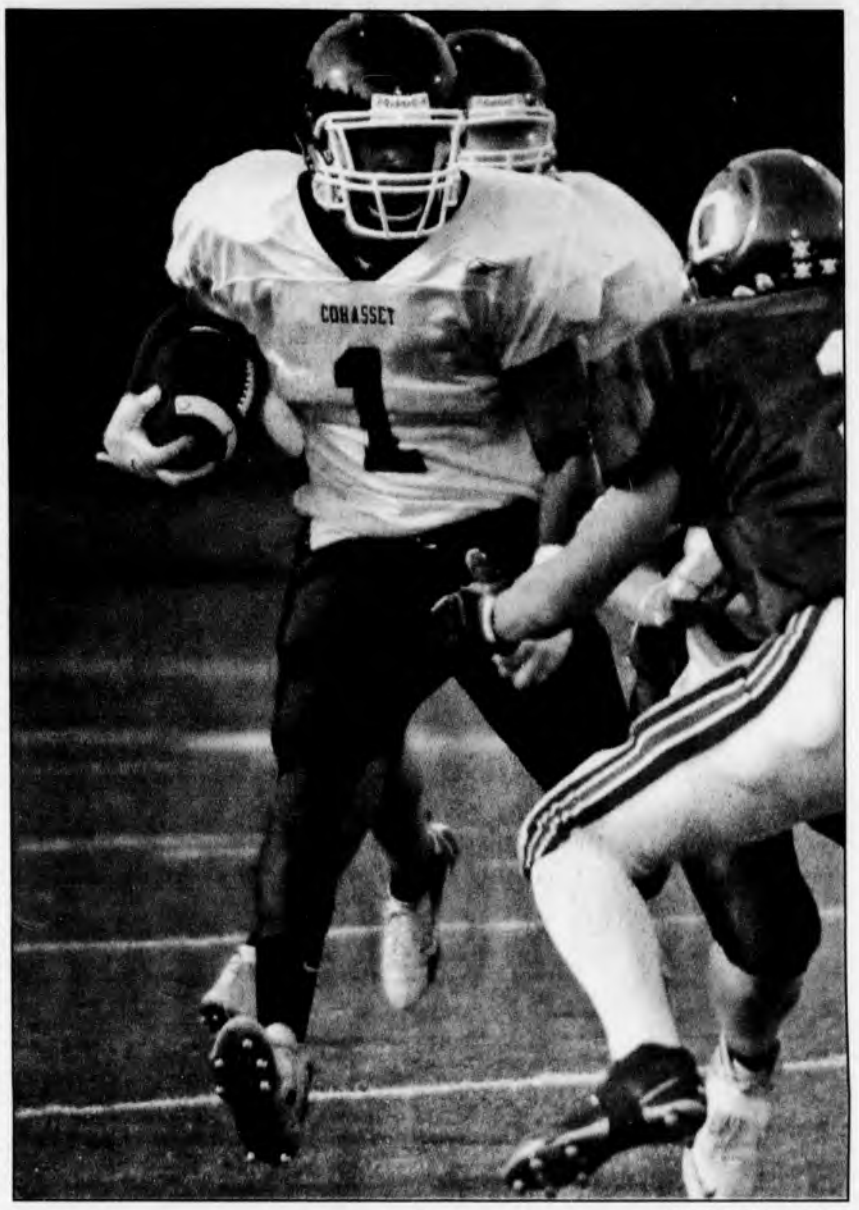
Quarterback Jeff Cavanaro set up a trips offense with Dean Driscoll, Brendan Doonan and Valentine all on his left side. Like he had done all night, Cavanaro hit his man, finding Doonan on a crossing pattern in the back of the end zone for the win.

Afanasiw was impressed with the young signal caller who made his first varsity start in only his second year of playing football.

"There was no decision," Afanasiw said. "I've had two ties [as a coach] and I never want to tie another game again. When you show up there has to be a winner and a loser. You got to take a chance. I'd rather try and fail than never try at all."

Cohasset showed that old cliché, heart, Friday night. Cavanaro, Doonan, Drsicoll and Valentine helped relinquish their non-league foe with a number of outstanding plays on offense.

Valentine scored on a 55-yard run on the third play of the game. Cavanaro hit Driscoll and Doonan for touchdowns in the first half and the Skippers led 20-12 heading into the locker room.



Valentine finished with 127 yards and two touchdowns on 16 carries. Cavanaro went 13-for-19 with 233 yards, 2 touchdowns and 2 interceptions.

Afanasiw was impressed with the young signal caller who made his first varsity start in only his second year of playing football.

"We were pleasantly surprised," he said. "He showed a lot of poise running the offense. He made some unbelievable throws and he made some mistakes but he will learn. He is a very talented individual."

Cohasset still has a long way to go according to Afanasiw, but he was pleased most with his team's effort. "They tried hard and they never quit."

Cohasset will play at home against Pembroke, Friday night at 7 p.m. The Titans lost to Hull Saturday.

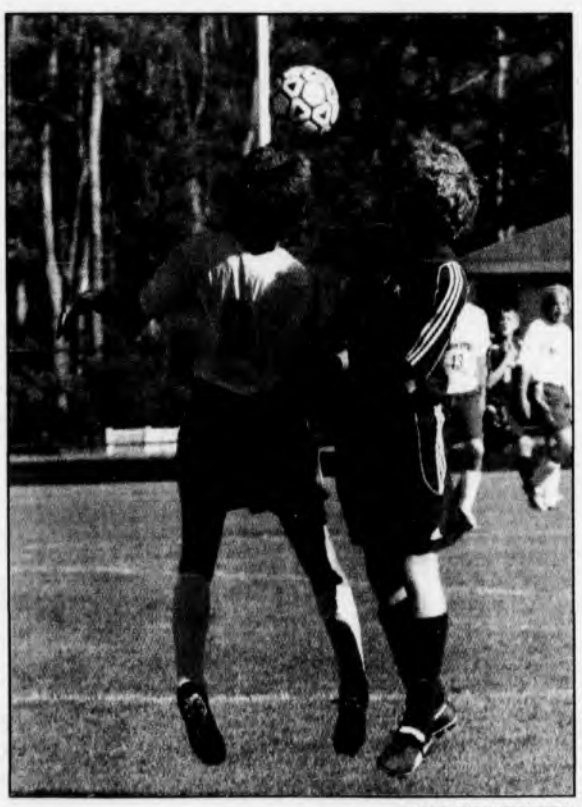
CHS boys look to surprise after heavy graduation toll

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM



You often hear coaches at this time of year expressing the hope that they will see "game-to-game" improvement from their teams, but "20 minute-to- 20 minutes improvement"? That's a new one.

But that is precisely what Jim Willis contends he saw from his young Cohasset High boys soccer team in this past weekend's jamboree at Hingham High.

"I thought we made some real strides as a team," said Willis. "We got hammered by four quick goals in the first (20-minute) half against Arlington, and you never know how your players are going to respond to something like that, especially when there are a lot of newer players out there, but these guys dug down and came out much better in the second half, and then just kept getting better the rest of the day. I was very encouraged."

Arlington only scored one more goal against Cohasset in the second half. The Skippers then played perennial state power Hingham to a 2-0 loss in the second 40 minute set before finally pulling out a win over Boston Latin. With seven starters from last year's state tourney team lost to graduation and a senior

Bittersweet start to field hockey season

Skippers 1-1 ready for tough slate ahead

By Susan Franklin
CORRESPONDENT

After only a few short weeks of preparation, the Cohasset High field hockey team took the field against Scituate. Last year's quarterfinalist not only faced a skilled opponent, the young team had a new coach and the big shoes to fill of many talented graduated seniors.

The defense would have to replace the focus and skill of Paige Strecker, the midfielders would have to fill the space left by the hard driving, ferocious play of Sally Meehan and the forwards would have to replace the lightening fast Olivia Kimla.

Graduated seniors aside, a cohesive group of veterans returned to play for the Lady Skippers, including captains Marissa Tangherlini, Jenny Cahill and Alyssa Mullin and juniors Lucy Noble, Hilary Gaumer, Jean Thomae, Izzy Franklin, Kate Durant and Hannah Burgess.

The poised squad took the field and immediately set the pace for the game. Cohasset captain out of action, Willis is looking for any signs of progress, particularly in the area of team cohesion.

"With all of the turnover we've had, it's still pretty difficult to predict what kind of team we're going to have, but this was definitely a positive sign," said the Skippers' second year head coach.

Of course, Willis could say the same thing about the rest of the South Shore League, which features several teams in the same boat as the Skippers, the caps and gowns having taken a heavy toll virtually across the board. All but two of the 2007 SSL all-stars graduated.

"I think the South Shore League is totally up in the air right now, with no clear favorites" said Willis, who directed the Skippers to a third place finish last season and a regular season record of 10-6-2. "I like that. There's no reason my guys should be intimidated by any team going in."

Last year's Skippers were certainly not intimidated by anyone. They played league champ East Bridgewater to a scoreless tie in the first meeting then lost a 1-0 decision later in the season. The playoff run ended when perennial Patriot League power Hanover (a far larger school) took a 1-0 decision by virtue of a goal with 27 seconds left in regulation.

"That was obviously a pretty brutal way to end my first year as head coach," said Willis. "We had a lot of seniors, and expectations were pretty high, so to lose the way we did was pretty crushing for a lot of people, myself included."

Gone from that team are seven starters, among them four captains. Included in both those categories were two-time SSL all-stars Mike Grimm and Sam Roth.

So the Skippers return just four starters

Lennart Brown was a leader both on and off the field last year, and will take on a far greater role in both areas this fall. The soccer-loving senior was a no-brainer choice as a tri-captain and Willis plans to use him as a middle man in whatever third of the field the team is the most wanting.

"I could start Lennart at center mid, move him up front a while later, then finish the game with him at sweeper, and I doubt he'd ever miss a beat," lauded Willis, "He's performed awesome in every role we've played him in. He loves the game so much that you never have to worry about him settling into a rhythm."

The team's other senior captain will be Conor Ofsthun, who has yet to practice this fall due to a severe ankle sprain suffered late in the summer. Ofsthun was a semi-regular starter at outside back last fall, and will likely return to that role once healthy.

"Conor is just one of those rock solid defenders you don't worry about," said Willis. "He just gets the job done."

The third captain will be junior Will Wise, the team's starting keeper since his freshman year.

"I expect Will to be one of the league's top keepers again this year," said Willis of Wise, who is also a star lacrosse player and top student. "I think he was one of the top keepers last year, but he had two very good seniors in the league who got the all-star choice ahead of him, but I think you're going to see him getting a lot of recognition this season."

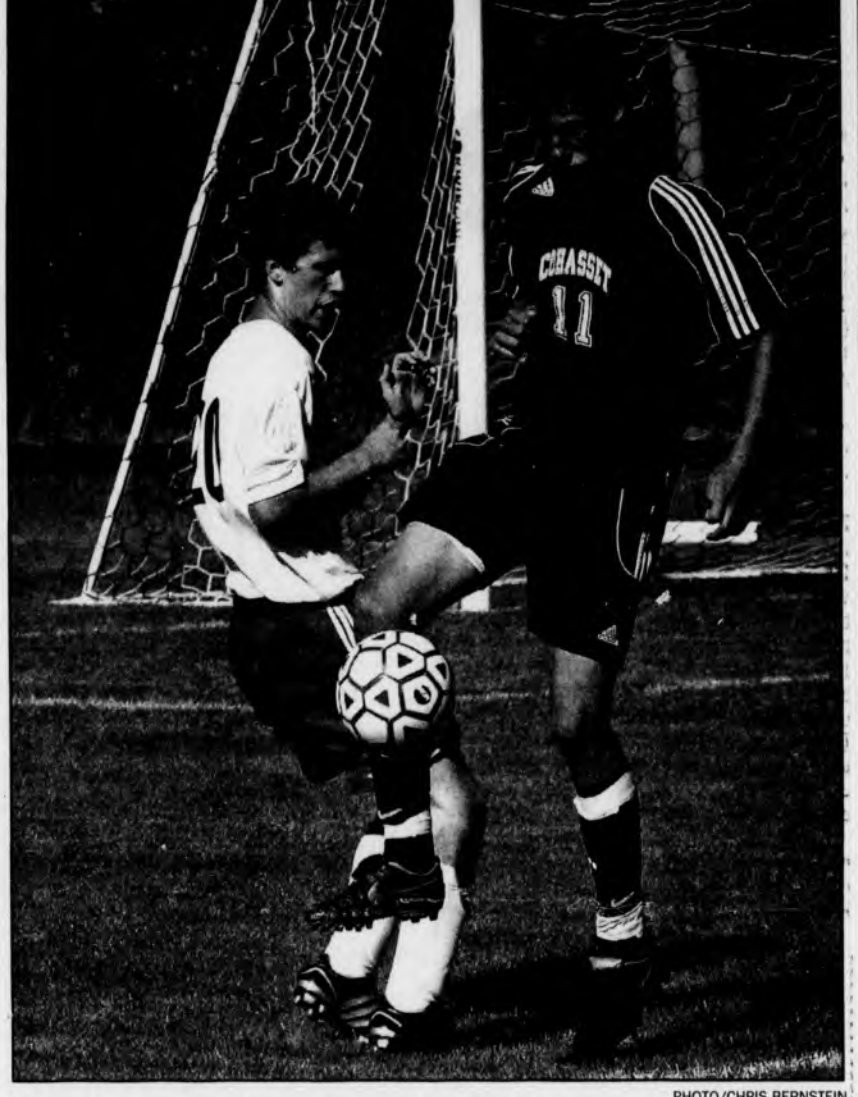
It appears as if the Skippers will be building from the back, as senior Owen Landon and sophomore Mike Monaco also return to a starting roles in the back, Landon playing in the middle of the three fullback alignment, Monaco flanked opposite Ofsthun.

Until Ofsthun returns, juniors Mike Filby and Jack Murphy appear to be the two players who will be most counted upon to fill that void. One will start, the other likely to be the first player off the bench.

"It's been kind of a baptism under fire for both those guys, but that's actually a positive aspect of (Ofsthun) being out," said Willis. "These guys are being forced to develop a lot quicker than they might otherwise have had to. It's helping us develop some depth at a key spot."

The loss of Roth will be difficult to overcome at the offensive end, but senior Ivan Sceery was Roth's running mate last fall and finished second to him in the team scoring race.

"If Ivan can pick up where he left off, and a few other guys step it up like I think they cane, I think we're going to be a pretty solid team offensively," Willis assessed.



Sophomore Anders Goetz saw some varsity time last year as well, and is the favorite to succeed Roth as the second striker.

Freshman Jonah Adkins, probably the most pleasant surprise to date for Willis, may also see some time up front, though the coach sounds more inclined at this time to have him bolster a midfield that was hit hard by graduation. The loss of Grimm as a quarterback of the offense leaves a sizeable void.

"Jonah already appears to be one of our most skilled players overall," said Willis, who was previously a head coach at neighboring Scituate High.

Two juniors who have earned themselves starting nods in the midfield are Andrew Littauer and Tyler Durant. Senior August Oddliefson was a key player off the bench last fall, and will most certainly be a key player in the midfield again this season.

Depth is likely to be provided in the early going by sophomores John McGoldrick (a tourney call up last year), Drew Cobin and Travers Craven, and freshman Jamie Timothy.

Abington's Rob Chiardi and Cohasset's Ivan Sceery battle for a 50/50 ball.

The JV team will start out carrying 20 players, several of them worthy of varsity consideration, according to Willis.

"We've got a lot of younger players down there who have definitely shown me they wouldn't be out of place with varsity," said Willis, "but, all things being equal, I'd rather see them get as much playing time as possible at the JV level and continue to develop by playing."

The Skippers opened their 19-game regular season last Friday at home vs. Scituate, Willis' old team.

The Skippers played their first league game against Abington on the road last Monday, then followed that up wit ha trip to Harwich Wednesday.

"There's a lot of mystery around this season right now, but I think I'll have a much better idea of where we stand come Tuesday," concluded Willis. "These first two games should be very nice tests."

Test scores not good

Unfortunately, these test scores have not been very good.

The Skippers have dropped their first three matches by a combined score of 10-1, sandwiching shutout losses of 5-0 and 3-0 to Scituate and Harwich, respectively, around a 2-1 loss to Abington Monday.

Jonah Adkins has the Skippers lone goal of the season to date.

Next up

The Skippers play two more SSL matches next week, hosting longtime archrival Norwell on Monday night (5 p.m. start), then hitting the road to take on defending league champion East Bridgewater Wednesday (3:30 p.m. start).

Lady Black Jacks entering fifth season in 2009

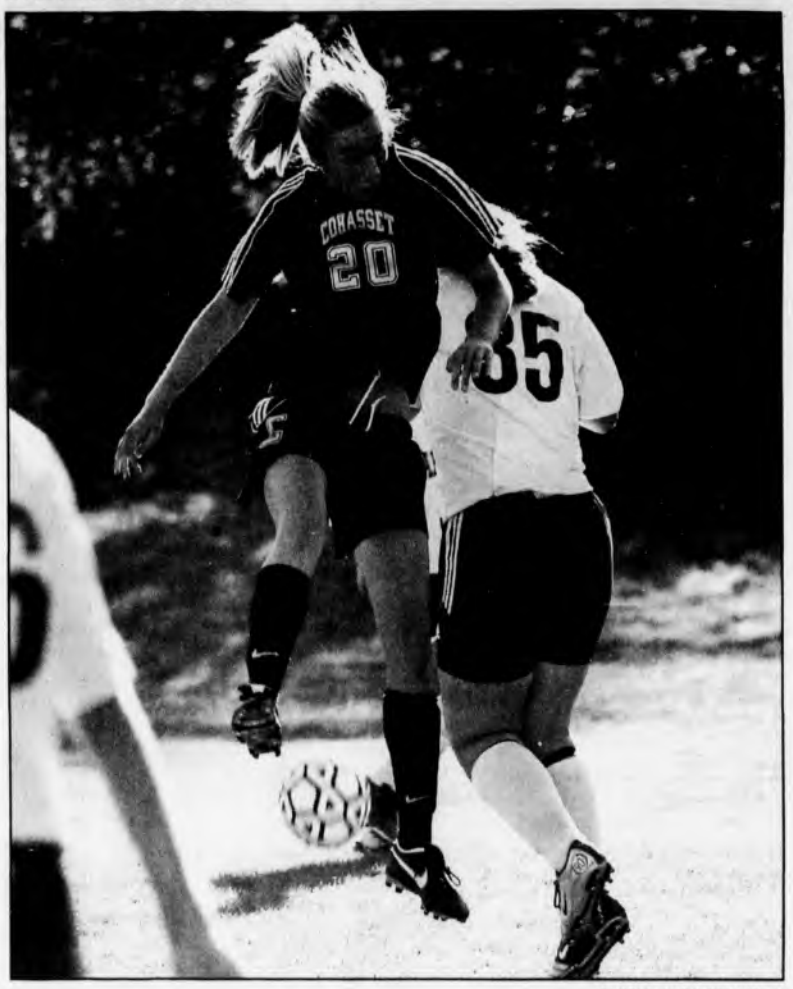
By Ben Woodson
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

As they finish their fourth season this fall, the Lady Black Jacks of 21 Lacrosse continue to impress college coaches throughout the country. For the fourth year, they come off a busy summer after traveling to The National Draw in Marlton NJ, The Rumble in Trumbull, (Trumbull, CT) and the Long Island Elite Showcase in early August.

The National Draw hosted almost 200 teams from all over the country. This is a very well run and highly recruited summer 'showcase' tournament. The Rumble in Trumbull pulled in many of the same teams from the Draw, but on a smaller scale which has its positive sides participating in a smaller tournament. At Rumble, many recruiting coaches were in attendance as well. After traveling down the day before to Long Island, The LIE tournament (usually 100 teams in attendance), was cancelled mid day due to bad weather.

This year's team members are the following: Goalie Lindsey Cahoon, Sr. (Falmouth), Shayla Entwistle, Sr. (Marshfield), Carly Pleines, Sr. (Marshfield), Julia Daly, Jr. (Thayer), Mary Lee Mahony, Jr. (Yardley, PA), Kelsey Conroy, Jr. (Marshfield), Krista Stengrevics, Jr. (Concord Carlisle) Devan Bahr, So. (Duxbury), Cory Conley, So. (Norwell), Jenna Cusick, So. (Duxbury), Laura Ferzoco, So. (Norwell), Megan Finneran, So. (Scituate), Sarah Giardino, So. (Foxboro), Eliza Kinnealey, So. (Cohasset), Kaci Kucinski, So. (Cohasset), Olivia Murphy, So. (Cohasset), Chappy Scheller, So. (Norwell), Maddie Schopshire, So. (Barnstable), Sara Varano, So. (Duxbury) and Alanna Woodford, So. (Scituate).

When Coach Meghan Sweeney was asked to comment on the summer, she said, "The players worked extremely hard this summer. With some extra hard work, they saw their rewards pay off – especially at the Rumble where they went 4-1-1 and their only loss was by one point. They are a young and extremely talented team. I anticipate this fall to be as successful as last summer."



With the competition getting harder and harder to get into college today, these tournaments are very important venues for the girls to be seen at in order to get a leg up in the college recruiting process.

"We have, and will continue, to maintain our "boutique" approach to our teams," said coach and founder of 21 Lacrosse, Rick Bagby. "We will always maintain our rosters at approximately 22-24 players. We keep the same team together at all tournaments. This affords everyone ample opportunity to play in the team camps and tournaments we attend. In some eyes, bigger means better (in regards to program size.) But, we have found that is not necessarily true. We pride all of our team's successes and spirit on the ability to play with the same team members over each season and year after year."

If you are interested in trying out for the Lady Black Jacks, the tryouts for the 2009 team will be held Sunday September 21 from 11:30 a.m. to 1:00 p.m. and Sunday, September 28 from 10:00 a.m. to 1:00 p.m. at the Ryan Flannery Field in Scituate.

For more information contact Andrea Kinnealey, GM, at akinnealey@comcast.net, or coach Sweeney at msweeney@hinghamschools.com or go directly to 21Lacrosse.com to register.

Bittersweet start to field hockey season

monopolized the ball, enabling them to maintain strategic field position. Less than three minutes into the game, Jenny Cahill broke out of traffic in the Scituate zone and streaked to the goal. Her shot on goal was deflected but Lucy Noble controlled the rebound and scored.

Cohasset's defense was tenacious and Scituate could not get a rhythm going. A Cohasset corner by Lucy Noble set Izzy Franklin up but scrappy stick play foiled her shooting attempts. Cohasset dominated possession time and Scituate failed to get the ball over to their offensive end for long stretches at a time.

Control of the ball yielded Cohasset many scoring opportunities but they were unable to capitalize. Scituate called a time out to regroup. With a short time left in the half, it appeared Cohasset was in command of the game, but the score only read 1-0.

After the time out Jenny Cahill found Hilary Gaumer in front of the goal and she sealed the score. Up 2-0, Scituate pushed on goal but a series of shots were quelled by goalie Alyssa Mullin. When half time was signaled, many Cohasset players had seen field time.

The second half started out with Cohasset again in control of the tempo and the ball. However, the team faced an emotional challenge when senior captain Marissa Tangherlini was knocked down at midfield in a collision that resulted in injury.

Removed from the field (later taken by ambulance to the hospital), Marissa suffered numerous injuries including a sprained clavicle and dislocated shoulder. But before the momentum could shift, Cohasset's Elise Quebec put one in the goal.

A clear by Lucy Noble, now taking a turn at the defensive end of the field, was chased down by Hilary Gaumer but Scituate sticks hindered the offensive push. A Scituate scoring attempt was thwarted when Jean Thomae got her stick on the ball in front of the Cohasset goal. A flurry of back and forth ensued with midfielders Izzy Franklin, Lesen Haracz and Natalie Dignam running up and back, and up and back again.

Finally, Erika Readon was able to find Jenny Cahill for a goal taking the score to 4-0.

With a minute remaining Scituate found the goal bringing the score to 4-1. A final push by Scituate resulted in a corner but the shot was saved by Alyssa Mullin and the game was history.

The following day, the squad traveled to formidable opponent East Bridgewater to square off in the hot, humid weather. The Skippers started off strong, but East Bridgewater posted two back-to-back goals and Cohasset was unable to bounce back until late in the second half when Alyssa Mullin made a great save on a penalty stoke.

Feet calls against Cohasset lead to a number of corners for East Bridgewater, one of which resulted in their third goal. When the clock ran out, Cohasset left the field on the short end of a 3-0 loss.

The girls have three away games at Norwell (Sept. 8 after Cohasset Mariner deadline), Notre Dame (Sept. 16) and at Harwich (Sept. 18) before returning to Cohasset to host Nantucket High School, Saturday, September 20 at 10:30 a.m.

New tardy policy is a wakeup call

LIFE AT CHS

LAUREN MACK

With the summer of 2008 now fondly behind us, I'd like to welcome all students, faculty, and parents back into the brisk September season! I'm also proud to announce that I, along with the rest of my class, have successfully endured the first full week of senior year with only minor bumps and bruises. And by bumps and bruises, I mean copious amounts of homework and a wake-up call that I'll never get used to. Especially this year because, again, the tardy rules have gotten even stricter. In addition to the new closely enforced tardy policy, there are also several other new additions to Cohasset High School! New this year:

Rather than the usual three-term English classes, freshmen this year will have English all four terms; but with a twist! The period three classes will meet every other day with the rotating schedule, rather than the regular four days and drop once a week.

There will be a musical this year, and it has been confirmed by the music department that the production will be "West Side Story". So to all students looking to try-out, mark your calendars, because auditions are said to start as early mid-September!

And as I'm sure most of us have probably heard, Monday is a professional day for students, meaning no school and a wonderful three-day weekend!

In addition to these changes around the school, there are also many new faces in the high school faculty. One in particular, who was actually a teacher in the middle school previously, has become the new Journalism teacher, taking the place of Ms. Berman who retired last year. This individual goes by the name of Mr. McCabe and he will not only be advising the award-winning Spinnaker newspaper, but is also teaching an English class.

I caught up with Mr. McCabe for the Teacher Quote of the Week and asked him what he does on a typical morning: "Well, I wake up, get ready, eat Grapenuts and come to school. I love Grapenuts; they are far superior to Nutty Nuggets. That's the generic brand and it just isn't the same." So there you have it: the power cereal that gets one of the newest additions to the high school through the day.

Stay tuned for next week, everyone! And have a fun and safe long weekend! Also, if there is anything in particular that you would like me to cover in my articles, please don't hesitate to send me an email at redhead20891@yahoo.com and I'll be sure to include whatever it is you'd like to hear about! Adios!

Lauren Mack is a senior at Cohasset High. Her column appears weekly during the school year.

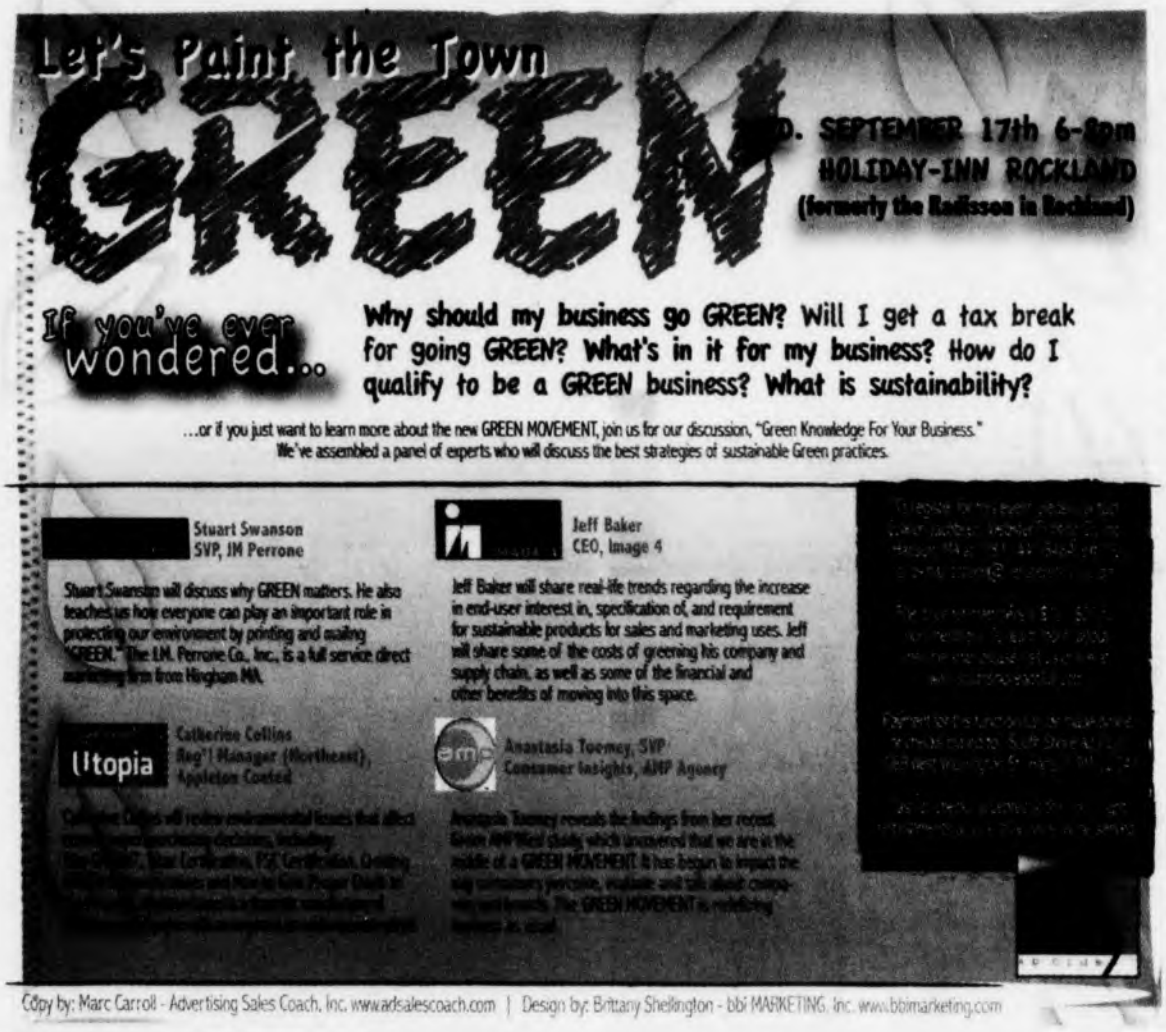
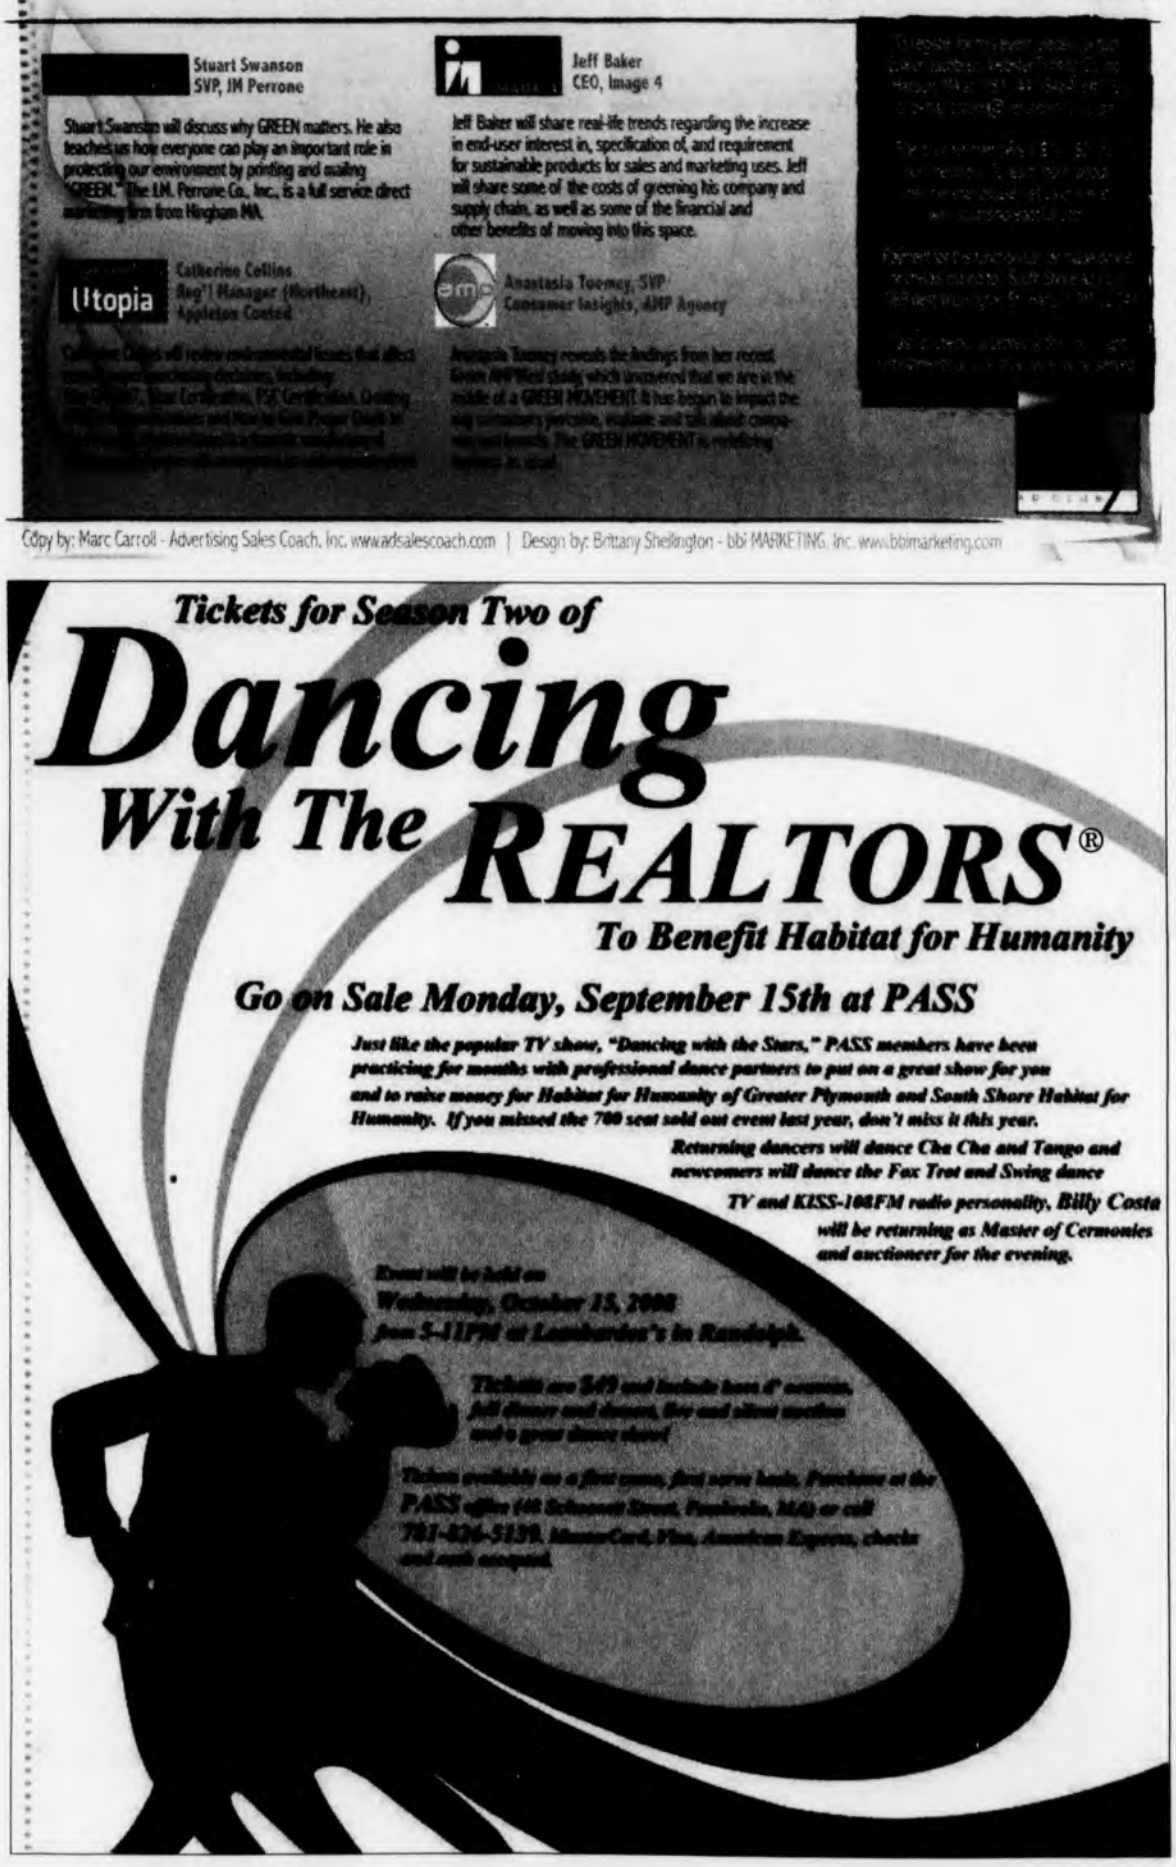
Fifty percent of sales go to the PSO, providing more than a third of the PSO's operating budget. All wrapping paper is processed on recycled paper; all ink is 100 percent water-based, and all leftover ink is recycled.

PSO swings into action with annual gift-wrap sale



People will see cute, colorful monkeys flying high at Osgood and Deer Hill schools this week as the PSO launches its fall Innisbrook Gift-wrap Fundraiser. The PSO and Innisbrook have been successfully teaming up every fall for several years now, offering gift-wrap and one-of-a-kind gift and hostess items, as well as Helen Grace Chocolates. With 50 percent of sales going to the PSO, this fundraiser provides more than a third of the PSO's operating budget and enables the carrying out of the PSO mission, which is "to provide important, supplemental, curriculum materials and programs to the schools here in Cohasset." The monkeys are part of several incentives designed to get students and their families aware of and excited about this sale.



The fall fundraiser started Sept. 10 and will continue through Sept. 26. Stop by Osgood and Deer Hill schools to see the monkeys and displays of gift-wrap and accessories.

While this fall's catalog offers new and fun prints and gift items, the most exciting change in this year's sale is that Innisbrook has gone green. For the first time, all wrapping paper is processed on recycled paper, all ink is 100 percent water-based, and all leftover ink is recycled. Paper is only bought from mills that support local and global environmental initiatives, and all cardboard is made of recycled materials, as are the pallets on which the items are delivered. Additionally, there are several items offered in the catalog and on the Web site that are green or environmentally friendly, such as rechargeable flashlights, aluminum water bottles and reusable canvas totes. The PSO is excited with the green changes at Innisbrook, and feel that the wrapping paper is still high quality and stylish, which is why the sale has been successful each year. Last year's sales were more than $42,000, with more than $21,000 then going to the PSO. Those profits were used to fund many programs designed to enhance learning at the Osgood and Deer Hill schools such as Character Education programs, teacher classroom grants, library grants for new and updated books, and curriculum enrichment programs aimed at sparking children's interest in science and engineering, as well as funding some of the upcoming improvements to the Middle/High School auditorium.

The fall fundraiser started Sept. 10 and will continue through Sept. 26. Stop by Osgood and Deer Hill schools to see the monkeys and displays of gift-wrap and accessories. See the large totes stuffed with wrap, food items and gifts that will be given to the teacher at each school with the highest percentage of student participation in the sale. Look for a neighbor or friend selling from their catalog or stop by the schools, the library, nursery schools or town hall and pick up a catalog. Orders can be made with students or placed online, which is easier than last year as Innisbrook has updated the Web site to make it user friendly. The PSO would like to thank all families, members of the school community and the town for support and participation in this PSO fundraiser. The funds are used for the betterment of our children's school experience.

For more information, call Osgood PSO organizer, Carolyn Coffey at 781-383-8182 or Deer Hill PSO organizer, Mary Jo Blackington at 781-383-0626.

Free practice tests for PSAT, SAT, and ACT

Summit Educational Group is offering free practice tests this fall for the PSAT, SAT and ACT at Hingham High School. The next scheduled test date is Saturday, Sept. 20.

Summit's free practice tests are an opportunity for students to gauge their strengths and weaknesses under realistic test-taking conditions. Exposing students to standardized testing before the real SAT takes away some of the mystery of the test, helps to reduce anxiety and increases student confidence.

Summit's free practice tests for the PSAT, SAT and ACT are open to all students who wish to get a head start on test preparation. An extended time option is available for students who have been approved to take the SAT with extended time. Summit will score the test and provide a detailed analysis and score report to each student within seven days. The score analysis will pinpoint each student's strengths and areas in need of improvement.

For a complete listing of dates and locations, visit the Web site at mytutor.com or call the Summit program director at 800-698-8867.

Robine Andrau to speak at Historical Society

Cohasset Historical Society will welcome Robine Andrau as guest speaker for the first of the Wednesday night lectures on Wednesday, Sept. 17.

During World War II, Andrau and her family were interned in a Japanese Prisoner of War camp in Indonesia. Her father was a captain in the Royal Dutch Air Force at the outbreak of World War II. Because of his engineering expertise, he was temporarily released from military service on the European front and sent, along with Andrau's Hungarian mother, two sisters and Robine, to Indonesia to build an aviation fuel plant. When the Japanese overran Indonesia, Andrau's father, along with the other Dutch military men, was taken prisoner, shipped to Japan, and forced to work in a coal-mining town for the duration of the war. Meanwhile Andrau and the rest of her family, along with the other Dutch women and children, were rounded up and detained in concentration camps in Indonesia, where the living conditions and food were so inadequate and harsh that many died of starvation or disease, and beatings at the hand of the Japanese occurred at the smallest infraction of the rules. Keeping written records was forbidden, but Andrau's mother kept a diary and was able to keep it from being discovered. Years later, the Dutch Red Cross discovered a suitcase filled with her father's papers and restored the case to the family. That suitcase, along with the diary, is helping Andrau to record this part of her family's history. This is the story she will share on Wednesday evening.

The program will begin at 7:30 p.m., in the Society's headquarters, the Pratt Building, 106 South Main St., Cohasset. There is no charge for the program and light refreshment will be served.

Clement Micarelli

South Shore art community loses mentor

When Clement Micarelli passed away on Aug. 28, 2008, at age 79, a canvas sat at the ready in his studio, prepped for a new portrait commission. It was a testament to a respected artist who remained in demand for his masterful technique and ability to reveal the individuality and spirit of his subjects.

Known as "Mic" to his family and friends, he was a beloved mentor to scores of artists over the years. He taught privately and as a faculty member of the Rhode Island School of Design. His connection with RISD began in 1941 when, at the age of 12, he attended his first figure drawing course. After serving in the Army during the Korean War, Mic went on to study at Pratt Institute in New York City where he lived with his wife and childhood sweetheart Mary Amalfitano. As he and Mary raised their three children, Joe and Domenic of Hingham and Paula Micarelli Sullivan of Marshfield, Mic built a successful career as a fashion illustrator, while never abandoning his work and identity as a painter and fine artist. Domenic owns the Christopher Gallery in Cohasset.

After moving the family to Massachusetts in 1971, Mic eventually settled in Marshfield where he became a valued member of the vibrant South Shore art community. He was also the center of a loving clan that grew to include five grandchildren – Ray, Christopher, Tori, Noelle and Julianne – whom he adored and, naturally, painted often.

Some of Mic's portraits, illustrations and landscapes can be seen at www.cmicarelli.com. To honor Mic, donations can be made to the Norwell Visiting Nurse Association (www.nvna.org), which was so supportive during his battle with lung cancer, or the American Cancer Society.

A private memorial will be held for family and friends.

Historic Albi, France, is the hometown of artist Henri Toulouse-Lautrec.

The countryside around Albi is dotted with historic walled towns, including Cordes-sur-Ciel (Cordes in Heaven), now home to artists and artisans.

Toulouse-Lautrec-ing in France's Midi-Pyrenees

William A. Davis
GATEHOUSE NEWS SERVICE

ALBI, FRANCE - Artist Henri Toulouse-Lautrec famously reveled in the seamy but colorful nightlife of Paris in the last decades of the 19th century and captured it brilliantly in paintings, prints and posters that are icons of the age. An unlikely person, one might think, to be deeply rooted in a mostly rural area of the Midi-Pyrenees region of Southwest France.

However, although Toulouse-Lautrec spent most of his life in the City of Light, he was born in Albi in 1864 and grew up in a chateau belonging to his aristocratic family (his father was a count) in the lush nearby countryside. Today, the artist's birthplace is marked by a modest plaque, but there is nothing modest about the local art museum. The Toulouse-Lautrec Museum (www.musee-toulouse-lautrec.com) in Albi contains the world's largest collection of the artist's work: More than 1,000 paintings, sketches and lithographs, including originals of all the Parisian cabaret posters that made him famous.

When Toulouse-Lautrec died in 1901, at the age of 37, from the effects of alcoholism, he left his estate to his mother. The estate contained nearly all his paintings, and she first offered the collection to the Louvre Museum in Paris, which refused it. The art museum in the city of Toulouse likewise said no, with the director declaring that most of the paintings and drawings - many depicting prostitutes and racy nightclub performers - should be burned.

Finally, in 1922, the artist's mom donated the collection to the Albi museum - newly opened and in need of art.

Visiting this remarkable museum, housed in a former medieval bishop's palace, is like walking through the artist's tumultuous life. Virtually all of his best-known works are on view, including sketches and original prints of all the colorful advertising posters, most associated with the famous Moulin Rouge.

Among the posters are several of both the graceful dancer Jane Avril, the "toast of Paris," and the outrageous La Galoue, "The Glutton," so called because she liked to snatch food and drinks from patrons' tables.

These advertisements, with their unusual compositions and dramatic use of color, caused a sensation in their day. When the singer Yvette Guilbert, known for her trademark long black gloves, complained that one lithograph made her look ugly, Toulouse-Lautrec played a joke and created a striking image with a poster that emphasized the gloves and showed the rest of her only from the neck down.

The flamboyant showman Aristide Bruant was so pleased with the famous poster depicting him with a black slouch hat, thick walking stick and a long bright red muffler that he put it up all over Paris, enhancing both his and the artist's reputations.

The museum also has sketches made by the artist while he sat at a table in the Moulin Rouge with a glass of absinthe at his elbow. There are drawings he did as a boy and others done near the end of his life along with paintings and drawings of his friends and relatives. One gallery features depictions of the artist himself by his artist friends.

The museum building is as distinctive as the art it contains. In the 13th century, a Christian sect based in Albi rejected the authority and most of the tenets of the Catholic Church and became known as the Albigensian Heresy. The sect was suppressed only after a series of brutal crusades by armies from northern France that ravaged the region. The massive, thick-walled bishop's palace, which resembles a military bastion, was also headquarters of the infamous Inquisition, the arm of the church charged with rooting out heresy.

Some of the rooms used as art gallery space today were once torture chambers.

Known as "Albi the Red" for its many rose-red buildings, Albi is an attraction town in its own right, and a good base for exploration of the Midi-Pyrenees region.

The town grew up around a bridge built over the Tarn River in the 11th century, which is still in use. The heart of Albi is a web of narrow, cobblestone streets lined with centuries-old brick buildings - many housing restaurants, art galleries and antique shops.

Looming over everything is the turreted bulk of Saint-Cecile Cathedral, which stands on the highest point in town and looks more like a fortress than a house of worship. Like the bishop's palace, it was built to symbolize the might of the Catholic Church.

In contrast to the grimly severe exterior, the interior is richly decorated with bright colors and much gilded ornamentation. Over the main altar is an enormous and terrifying painting of the last judgment showing hordes of hideous devils dragging damned souls, presumably heretics, down to the fires of hell.

A more attractive legacy of the Albigensian crusades - which are still talked about here as if they only happened a few decades ago - are the many picturesque walled towns, called bastides, that dot the countryside around Albi.

A favorite is Cordes-sur-Ciel (Cordes in Heaven), located on a steep hill and often engulfed in morning fog so that the ancient ramparts seem to float magically. Once an Albigensian bastion, Cordes now carries on a more lasting tradition as a vibrant artist and artisan colony.

The artist's early years

Chateau du Bosc (http://toulouse-lautrecbosc.com), about 30 miles from Albi in Aveyron, is Toulouse-Lautrec's boyhood home. The small 11th century castle is still owned by the artist's family and furnished much as it was in the artist's day.

Here you learn the history of Toulouse-Lautrec's diminutive stature, blamed on a genetic disorder (inbreeding was not uncommon among aristocratic French clans in the 19th century). When Toulouse-Lautrec as a child broke both thighbones in separate accidents, the story goes, his legs stopped growing. As an adult, he stood only 4 feet, 11 inches, with a man's torso but boy-sized legs.

A dignified, diminutive woman in her 80s, his third cousin, Madame Tapie de Celeyran, shows visitors around the home. In a room of the castle that was once the playroom, a wall shows pencil marks measuring the growth of various children in the family. "We've shown Henri's mark so much we've made a hole in the wall," she said, pointing to the mark.

Toulouse-Lautrec's bedroom includes his childhood books, games and toys along with a model sailboat he made after his first fall. It was while bedridden that he first began to draw. Poignantly, many of those early sketches were of the horses he loved and now could no longer ride.

Tapie de Celeyran says her cousin is remembered as a lively boy with a mischievous sense of humor. A favorite prank, she said, was putting a goldfish in the water carafe on the dining room table. "Not everyone in the family understood Henri," she said, "but he won people over with his charm."

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) You might be in line for that job change you applied for. But be advised that you could be called on to defend your qualifications against supporters of other applicants.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) Creating a new approach to an old idea is one way to get beyond that workplace impasse. No such problems in your personal life, where things continue to flow smoothly.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) Be more forthcoming about your feelings concerning a proposed change either in your workplace or in your personal life. Your opinions are valuable. Don't keep them hidden.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) A changing situation in your life needs more patience than you appear to be willing to offer. Allowing it to develop at its own pace is the wisest course you can take at this time.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) With more stability in your life — on both personal and professional levels — this could be a good time to strengthen relationships with both friends and colleagues.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) People have always relied on your integrity not only to get the job done, but to get it done right. So don't be pressured by anyone into cutting corners to save time.

Reigniting 'A Chorus Line'

Co-choreographer of original trailblazer takes on the revival

Peter Pileski, Bob Avian, John Breglio (producer) and his wife Nan Knighton.

Bob Avian was with his late friend and co-choreographer Michael Bennett every step of the way on "A Chorus Line" from its very beginning almost 35 years ago, so when the idea of reviving the Tony- and Pulitzer Prize-winning musical was broached a few years back, Avian says nothing could have kept him away.

"I knew I had to be involved from the moment Michael's attorney, John F. Breglio, said he wanted to remount Michael's version of 'A Chorus Line.' I'm the keeper of the flame. I knew if Michael Bennett's masterpiece was to be remounted, I had better do it," explained Avian, who shared the 1976 Tony and Drama Desk Awards for Best Choreography with Bennett, by telephone from his home in Connecticut recently. "I couldn't imagine sitting in the audience and seeing what someone else might do with this show."

"I'm the keeper of the flame. I knew if Michael Bennett's masterpiece was to be remounted, I had better do it."
Director and choreographer Bob Avian

Understandably so, since Avian — along with composer Marvin Hamlisch, lyricist Edward Kleban, and librettists James Kirkwood and Nicolas Dante — had helped director Bennett develop the landmark show about dancers auditioning for spots in a chorus line, gleaned from countless hours of taped sessions with actual Broadway dancers, from workshops to an off-Broadway run at Joseph Papp's Public Theatre and then to Broadway, where the original production opened on July 25, 1975, and ran for 15 years. Bennett died of AIDS on July 2, 1987, at age 44, leaving control of his estate to Avian and Breglio.

Oct. 5, 2006, the Avian-directed revival of "A Chorus Line" — complete with a score that includes the oft-recorded ballad "What I Did for Love" and the climactic, high-kicking, all-chorus number "One" — opened on Broadway. That production closed last month, but this week a national tour comes to the Boston Opera House featuring Bennett and Avian's original choreography re-staged by Bayoork Lee, another longtime Bennett collaborator, who played Connie Wong ("Four-Foot Ten") in the original production.

Avian has an idea why the show still works.

"The first time around, it was all very inside in the way it looked at the experiences of dancers in the chorus. It surprised all of us when it took off and became the hit that it did. We didn't expect it would have that kind of broad appeal. It worked, however, partly because it was shocking for its time. The show expressed things people never said out loud back then.

"This time around it is all about the dancers and their amazing gifts as performers. The original kids were in rehearsal for over a year before we played to an audience. This revival, of course, has been very different, and most of our dancers now are too young to have even seen the original production. Our cast is so young that many of them don't even have a technique yet. Many times, as we were casting, I would just speak directly to them and learn what they are all about.

"They are a living amoeba on stage where keeping it real is what is most important. It only works when you keep the falseness out."

Avian, who first met Bennett in 1960 when the young dancers were cast for a European tour of "West Side Story," was Bennett's good friend and frequent collaborator. He worked with Bennett on "Company" in 1970 and both "Follies" and "Twigs" in 1971. The pair earned another shared Tony Award for Best Choreography for1979's "Ballroom," which Avian also co-produced on Broadway.

In 1981, Avian shared producing duties with Bennett, Geffen Records and the Shubert Organization on Bennett's Broadway smash, "Dreamgirls." Avian produced the subsequent national tour of "Dreamgirls" and supervised its 1987 Broadway revival. In 1993, Avian choreographed the Stephen Sondheim revue "Putting It Together" off Broadway with Julie Andrews. He also choreographed the 1999 Broadway production of the show that starred Carol Burnett.

Avian also choreographed the London and Broadway productions of "Miss Saigon," and "Sunset Boulevard," earning two more Tony nominations, in 1991 and 1995 respectively, in the process. In 2000, Avian returned to London to choreograph a musical version of "The Witches of Eastwick" for producer Cameron Mackintosh.

Avian, 70, came out of retirement for the revival of "A Chorus Line."

If reuniting with Breglio and Lee to both honor and protect Bennett's legacy weren't enough, Avian has also been able to share the experience of reviving "A Chorus Line" with his partner of 23 years, Peter Pileski, who serves as his assistant director. A Brockton native and, like Avian, a graduate of Boston University, Pileski admits that sharing a home and work life can present challenges.

"There are always certain situations that arise, because we're partners in life and now professionally, too. It can be very funny to work together all day and then go home together at night. We have our disagreements, of course, but we're able to separate the personal from the professional. And when it comes to 'A Chorus Line,' Bob is totally in charge. What's been interesting, though, is that he hired me to bring a fresh eye to the show. He wanted me to be an objective participant in the whole process. Our personal relationship has allowed much of our communication to be unspoken. We can say an awful lot with just nods," said Pileski by telephone from New York last week.

Plieski still has family in the Boston area. His brother, Tom Pileski, lives in Brockton and is a football coach at Coyle and Cassidy High School in Taunton, while another brother, Bob Pileski, lives in Canton, and nephews make their homes in Walpole and Boston. Pileski, who has produced and directed for the USA and Sci-Fi cable television networks, divides his time between homes in New York City, Fort Lauderdale, and Kent, Conn., which he shares with Avian.

Even though Bennett has been gone for over 20 years, Avian acknowledges that his memory remains vivid.

"I'm constantly aware of Michael's presence. When I mess around with this show, I always wonder what Michael would think and what he would want.

"This is the show Michael was born to do. It is his legacy. The memories, both joyous and painful, are tremendous. Michael and I shared so much together over 25 years. From the moment we met in 'West Side Story,' we instantly became best friends.

"I've often thought about the shows he would have done had he lived. I think about him all the time and still miss him very much."

"A Chorus Line" will be at the Opera House, 539 Washington St., Boston, through Oct. 5. For tickets and information, 617-931-2787 or go online at BroadwayAcrossAmerica.com/boston.

Pond talks no Treat

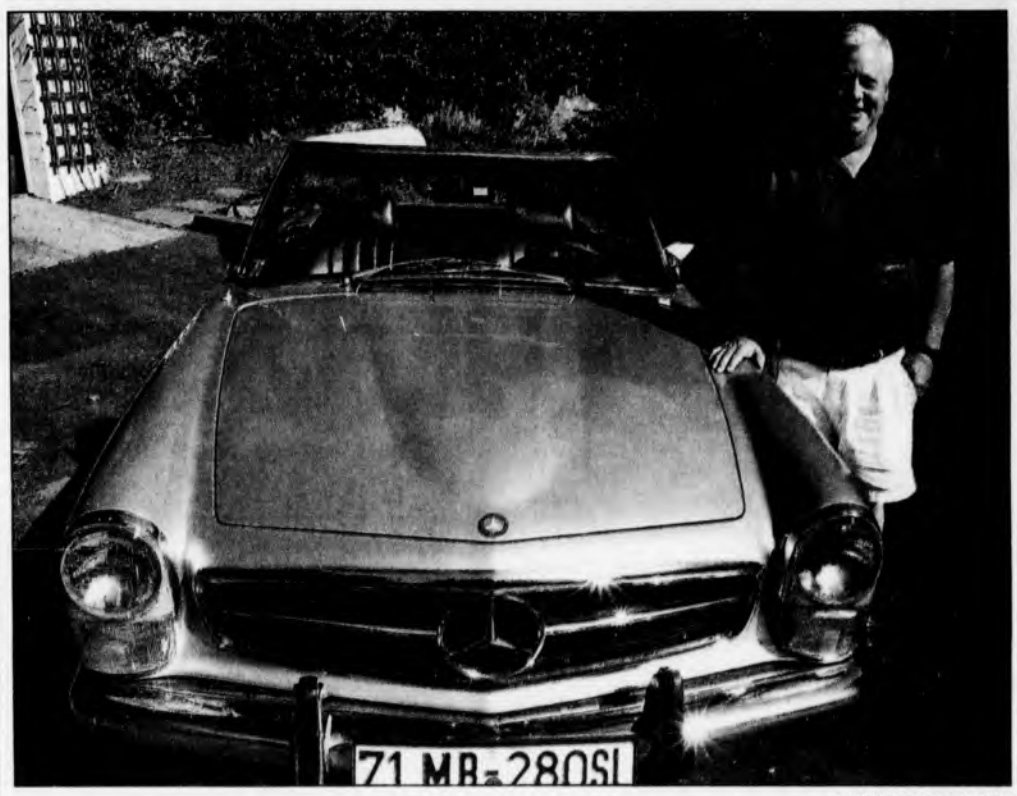
Selectmen grapple with access to drainage pipe

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

After laying low during the summer months, the Treat's Pond issue was back on the Board of Selectmen's agenda Monday night. Opinion hadn't changed much over the past two months on the issue, but Selectmen seem poised to take action.

At issue is the town's easement to the pond and, more controversially, its associated Sandy Cove drainage pipe that took center stage. The 1964 document (the "Bigelow deed") granting the easement to the town is still in conflict as members of the Board of Selectmen do not see eye-to-eye with some of the property owners the easement crosses.

The conflict could eventually lead the town to a lawsuit in Land Court or turn into a Town Meeting article. But, Selectmen said they are hoping to negotiate with the affected property owner to avoid litigation.



The pond, located off of Atlantic Ave. near the intersection of Whitehead Road, has been the subject of much discussion since the summer of 2007.

The easement issue is key to the greater scheme of Treat's Pond and its associated Atlantic Ave. flooding because it allows the town a legal way to maintain the drainage pipe. Keeping the outfall clear is crucial to preventing and alleviating flooding in the area while a more comprehensive solution is developed.

"I feel we should make a decision on how to service the pipe and the pond," said Selectmen Chairman Ted Carr in his opening remarks Monday night.

Carr peppered Town Counsel attorney Louis M. Ross of Deutsch Williams with questions on his reading of the deeds and gave the public a glimpse into what the town's options are. Yet, in the end, it was clear Carr and selectmen would prefer to resolve this issue without pursuing legal action. Following the two-hour public airing of the issue, the board went into executive session to further discuss strategy as it related to litigation and to consider acquisition of real estate as it pertains to Treat's Pond (Selectmen Ralph Dormitzer, who has recused himself as a Selectmen from discussion on the Treat's Pond issue,

Classic car owners revved up for Cohasset Day

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Weather forecasters are calling for sunny skies Saturday for the first Cohasset Day and there's no event where sun is more important than the Classic Car Concours. If there's even a hint of rain, the pristinely maintained, well-loved and almost priceless cars stay tucked in the garage.

Cohasset Day is all about showing off the treasures of the town and, in that spirit, the majority of the classic cars that will be on display are owned by Cohasset residents.

"Ninety percent of the car owners are owned by Cohasset residents, which is really what we intended to do," said Peter Brown, chairman of the Economic Development Committee, the organization behind the Cohasset Day initiative.

A total of 26 classic cars will be on parade and display at Cohasset Day. From the oldest vehicle, a 1928 Ford Model A Speedster, to the newest, a 1992 Ferrari 348 TS, car enthusiasts or simply lovers of beautiful machines will find plenty to gawk at.

The Classic Car Concours starts with a parade through one of Cohasset's most scenic drives — Atlantic Avenue

Slow day at the polls in Cohasset

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

It was, as predicted, a paltry turnout at the polls for Tuesday's State Primary. Just 7.8 percent of Cohasset's registered voters, a total of 408 residents, showed up to vote at Town Hall.

"There really wasn't too much on the Democratic ballot and there wasn't much on the Republican ballot," said Town Clerk Marion Douglas of the sleepy election.

It came as no surprise more Democrats came out than Republicans, as the Democratic ballot did have two races. Likely what was the biggest incentive for Democrats to get out and vote was the race for Senator in Congress where John F. Kerry was challenged by Edward J. O'Reilly. Kerry won Cohasset — and the state. Out of 344 Democratic ballot voters, 211 filled in the circle next to Kerry's name and 130 voted for O'Reilly.

The results of this primary determined which names end up alongside the presidential candidates on Tuesday,

Residents concerned about train idling

There is a growing concern among North Main Street residents located near the MBTA commuter rail station that the evening trains are excessively idling at the station. The residents wrote a letter to the MBTA to express their concerns, which the board of selectmen elected to sign as well. Greenbush engineers and liaisons Tom Gruber and Mark Brennan are discussing the issue with the MBTA. Town Manager Bill Griffin will also alert State Sen. Bob Hedlund and State Rep.Garrett Bradley to the issue to see what they can do.

Goal-setting postponed

The Board of Selectmen's Monday (Sept. 15) agenda originally included a "goal-setting" session, but the discussion on Treat's Pond ran longer than anticipated. The goal-setting agenda item will be rescheduled for a future meeting.

Brush chipping

Residential brush may be dropped off in the Public Works parking area from 7:30 a.m. to 3 p.m., on the following Saturdays: Sept. 27 and Oct. 25. No trees over five inches, no stumps, firewood, briars or weeds allowed.

Farm fresh news

Due to Water Dept. work in progress at the Common, the Cohasset Farmers' Market will be held at the Little League field on North Main Street for the remainder of the season.

Come on down, check out the new vendors and take home some of the season's local bounty!

POLICE BEAT

Three-car collision near Stop & Shop Plaza

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

A three-car pile up occurred last Wednesday (Sept. 10) near the Stop & Shop Plaza. All three cars were heading northbound on Route 3A. The driver of a 1989 Oldsmobile, owned and operated by a Rockland resident, dropped a lit cigarette, took his eyes off the road to retrieve it and hit the 2008 Toyota in front of him stopped at the red light. With the force of the collision, the Toyota then hit the 1989 Volvo in front of him.

Fender-bender

A 1999 Chevy, owned and operated by a Scituate resident hit a parked 2001 Mercury in the CVS plaza parking lot last Monday (Sept. 8) around 4:30 p.m. The contact caused minor damage to the driver side front corner of the Mercury. The Mercury, owned by a Cohasset resident, called the police for assistance. There were no injuries. The officer responding helped the parties exchange information.

Grade crossing cross up

Last Monday, the police dispatcher was given a heads up that the Pleasant Street grade crossing may have a malfunction. The MBTA contacted the dispatcher to alert them that work they were doing on the track may have tripped up part of the mechanism at the crossing. They were sending a crew out to address the problem, but wanted to give the police warning in case they received any calls about the crossing lights.

Police Chief James Hussey said the instances of grade crossing malfunctions have gone down considerably over the past couple of months.

"We've seen a dramatic decrease…it seems like the glitches have been worked out for the most part," said Hussey. The Greenbush commuter rail will have its one-year operating anniversary the end of next month.

Flashing lights ignored

A Cohasset police officer observed a car go through a school bus's flashing light and stop sign last Tuesday (Sept. 9) around noon. The officer pulled the car over immediately. In talking to the driver, he found out he was visiting from Ireland, not paying close enough attention and was not familiar with the roads. With that in mind, the officer gave the driver a verbal warning.

However, Chief Hussey said that is not typical.

"When a school bus is flashing its lights, people usually abide by the rules, but when it does happen, it's serious. Normally, we would handle the instance in a more severe way," said Hussey.

Whitehead bridge

A delivery of 75-foot steel beams for the construction of the Whitehead Island bridge made for some difficult maneuvering. Seven large tractor trailer flatbed trucks arrived on Atlantic Ave. to make the delivery last Tuesday afternoon.

"I think the delivery trucks were probably amazed how narrow the roads were," said Hussey.

With the help of several police details, the bridge pieces were brought down for delivery one by one. During approximately two-hour time span, Atlantic Ave. had to be shut down temporarily as the trucks entered and exited Whitehead Road.

Downed trees

Following a severe rainstorm last Tuesday, several calls came in concerning downed trees. Chief Hussey reminds residents to call the police anytime a tree limb makes contact with a wire, or other structure a resident perceives as potentially dangerous.

In most cases of downed trees or limbs falling on wires, police and fire officials are dispatched to the scene to assess the danger. Whether it is a telephone wire or an electrical wire, the appropriate vendor is called to respond to the problem.

"Anytime a tree or limb is blocking a public way in any fashion, we appreciate that residents contact us," said Hussey. DPW is usually called in to assist.

If a tree or limb falls on private property it is the owner's responsibility to remove the tree.

Smashed mailbox

A resident of Highland Ave. returned home last week to find his mailbox smashed and fence knocked down. The resident originally reported the incident as vandalism, but later found someone had left a note about the accident and offering to pay for the repairs. Sometime while the homeowner was away, a car hit the mailbox and fence. The police are working with the Highland Ave. resident to work out an agreement to pay for the damage.

"It's a nice thing, usually cars take off and not make themselves known," said Hussey.

Rear-ended

A car turning left off of Route 3A onto Brewster Road was struck from behind Thursday evening (Sept. 11). The cars were heading southbound on Route 3A, when a 1999 Honda owned and operated by a Cohasset resident stopped to make the turn. The car immediately behind, a 1997 Volvo driven by a Scituate resident, rear-ended the Honda. The driver of the Volvo told the police he did not see the Honda's directional. Neither party was taken to th hospital, but the Volvo was towed from the scene. The driver of the Volvo was cited for following too close.

Erratic operation

The Cohasset dispatch received an alert for erratic operation of a gold four-door sedan heading toward Cohasset on Route 3A from the Hingham police. Cohasset cruisers responded, but were unable to find the vehicle. The alert indicated the gold car had been passing cars in a no passing zone.

Cats on a boat

A boat hailing from Beverley tied up to the Government Island pier after one of the cats they were traveling with appeared to be having a seizure. They pulled in to find a veterinarian and called the police department for help. Animal Control Officer Paul Murphy responded. When Murphy arrived it appeared the cat that had the seizure had expired and another cat, also on the boat, seemed was lethargic and showing other signs of sickness. Murphy brought both cats to Crazy Paws veterinary hospital to be checked out. Some tests were run at Crazy Paws to determine what caused the cat's death and some blood work was done on the other cat. Murphy and the boat owners were concerned the cats got into something toxic while on the boat.

"We did the best we could for them," said Murphy. He is still waiting for a complete report from the vet on the deceased cat.

Bait fish

A load of bait fish that apparently fell off a moving vehicle was splattered over a portion of Forest Ave. last Saturday morning. A resident called the police reporting raw fish at the end of his driveway. DPW was called to clean up the smelly mess.

OUI arrest

A 58-year-old woman in a pink hat was arrested for her second offense of operating a vehicle under the influence of alcohol. A 911-caller reported what he believed to be an intoxicated woman getting into her car and driving away from the library.

Units were notified to look out for a green Toyota with a woman driving wearing a pink hat. An officer saw the car driving northbound toward Hingham on North Main Street. The cruiser followed the car for a short way and observed the car crossing the center line and, at one point, completely cross over to the other lane. The officer put on the blue lights and pulled the Toyota over near Joy Place.

Based on the officer's observations, the woman was arrested for operating under the influence of alcohol (second offense) and marked lanes violation. She was transported to the station and her car towed.

Tools stolen

Roughly $2,000 in tools was stolen from a new home on Stratford Terrace, a new street and development off Heritage Lane. A contractor locked up the home/job site around 5 p.m. on Saturday then returned on Sunday around 5 p.m. to find the tools missing. The house is still under construction, but is able to be locked up. On Sunday, he found numerous tools missing from the secured building. A few power drills, a sander, a Shop Vac vacuum and a nail gun was among the missing tools. Detectives are looking into how the house was accessed. The incident remains under investigation.

Music Circus exit plan worked well

The new exit strategy for the South Shore Music Circus was a success.

With the startup of the Greenbush train, the Police Department and Music Circus staff got together earlier this summer to talk about potential safety issues that might arise when hundreds of cars exit at the end of the performances. A MBTA train crosses the Sohier Street grade crossing at approximately 10:40 p.m., about 10 minutes after shows are over.

The police and Music Circus staff came up with a new traffic plan. In the past, cars have been directed both east- and westbound on Sohier Street. The new exit strategy made Sohier Street one-way. All traffic leaving the Music Circus was directed toward Route 3A, using both lanes of Sohier Street.

Police Chief James Hussey said the exit plan was only implemented when the ending of the show conflicted with a Greenbush train, but things went smoothly when it was used.

"The nights impacted it seemed to work very well," said Hussey. The police adjusted the plan slightly after the first couple of shows by placing cones at the end of each Music Circus driveway that exited onto Sohier Street to ensure cars did not turn against the one-way traffic.

Although a test run for getting an emergency vehicle up Sohier Street was not done, Hussey said he has "total confidence" there was enough room to maneuver an emergency vehicle up the street without a problem.

"We'll evaluate the plan again, listen to resident feedback, make changes and reconsider before next season," said Hussey.

Nov. 4 in the General Election. (See complete Primary election results on page 22).

Sixty-four voters requested the Republican ballot. Of note on the results was nearly 100 percent of the voters (63 of 64) cast a vote for State Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, running was unopposed in the Primary.

"It was fairly slow all day," said Douglas, adding they possibly gained a few voters who happened to be attending the Heath Fair next door at the Second Congregational Church.

Of the Cohasset's 5,193 registered voters, 1,157 are registered Democrats; 1,176 are registered Republicans; two are Green-Rainbow; one is Working Family and 2,851 are unenrolled. Although ballots were available for the Green-Rainbow and Working Family parties, there were no candidates on the ballot and no one in Cohasset requested one. Voters registered to the Libertarian or Reform parties are not eligible to vote in this state primary (Cohasset has five registered Libertarians and one Reform voter).

Although this year's turnout was low, the 2004 state primary election was even lower. Less than 5 percent of voters took the time to vote in that election. The 2008 state primary ties the 1988 primary as the second lowest voter turnout. In 1988, 371 voters, or 7.8 percent, went to the polls.

The Cohasset Town Hall auditorium was quiet during Tuesday's State Primary.

The turnout for this Primary is expected to pale in comparison to the numbers predicted for Election Day, Tuesday, Nov. 4 when the nation will choose a new president. She considered Tuesday's Primary somewhat of a "warm-up" for her office and her poll workers.

"Many of them are excited about working the November election," said Douglas. While there was plenty of down time yesterday, that won't be the case in a month and a half as Douglas said the state is predicting a 90 percent turnout of registered voters.

Many of the poll workers have been doing it for years, but Roger Whitley, along with his wife, Kitty, is a relative newcomer. He has worked the last three elections.

Working the polls makes for a long 13 and half hour day. With a couple of New Yorker magazines to read and a lot of friendly chat, Whitley passed the day checking in just 190 voters in Precinct 1 (218 checked in for Precinct 2).

"It's a long day, you're exhausted by the end," said Whitley, adding he is often concerned with holding up voters waiting in line as he finds them in the registered voter list, especially looking ahead to the very busy November election.

To keep the poll workers' energy up, food is provided to them. Whitley recalled when Douglas came before the Advisory Board when he was chairman to ask for money in the budget to provide meals to the poll workers.

"While eating my bagel yesterday, I told Marion (Douglas), I assume this bagel was paid for by the town budget," he said with a laugh. "I really got a kick out it."

Policy aimed to protect privacy

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Should there be a school policy on providing parents with information when — and why — a teacher leaves the Cohasset School District?

The answer seemed to be parents can find out when a teacher leaves, but in order to protect the privacy of the individual and reduce the school's liability, they won't find out why — at least from the school department.

Spurred on by parent inquires into the departure of several teachers, Superintendent of Schools Denise Walsh requested a legal opinion on what was the school's obligation when it came to providing information to parents when a teacher leaves the district.

School Counsel attorney Andrea Bell of Stoneman, Chandler & Miller developed a seven-page document outlining the relevant case law and her recommendation on a policy. Walsh reviewed the advisory opinion with the School Committee on Wednesday night.

It was the recommendation of counsel to not adopt a school district policy when it came to employee departure, but rather make an effort to communicate directly with the parents to notify them when the child's teacher has resigned or taken leave mid-year.

The information could inform parents of the students who are impacted that the teacher had left and provide the contact information of the replacement teacher, but it would not divulge the circumstances of the former teacher's departure.

If parents ask the school for more information or suspect misconduct, the attorney suggested the school advise the parent to independently seek information from other local and state agencies. As examples, the attorney offers local police, the court system and the Department of Education's licensure office.

"It takes the ownership off of us and provides parents with a direction to take those questions," said Walsh.

School Counsel cautioned the School Committee against establishing any clear policies on the issue, because it could increase the school's liability.

"…by having a policy, Cohasset creates a standard that must be followed and could incur liability if it failed to follow the policy," the advisory states. "It is difficult to say whether or not Cohasset would further insulate itself from liability with such a policy or inadvertently increase its liability in the event that it failed to follow the policy."

While Attorney Ross stated she recognized a letter informing parents of a replacement teacher would not satisfy the parent's desire to know the details behind a teacher leaving Cohasset, she said given the liability associated with further disclosure she felt it was an appropriate amount of information that Cohasset could offer parents over and above the current practice (i.e. mandatory reporting, public records requests, and common law duty to protect students from injury).

According to the letter, the School Department has denied all requests for information about teachers who no longer work for the district, regardless of whether the departure was "completely benign or related to possible misconduct." In these cases, they have cited a public records law exemption, which exempts personnel and medical files of a specifically named individual because the disclosure may constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy.

School Committee Vice Chairman Alfred Slanetz suggested perhaps a guideline statement in the policy manual, "we have to balance child safety with the teacher's right of privacy."

The School Committee did not adopt a policy or take any vote on the issue. There seemed to be a consensus to follow the attorney's advice on communicating with parents to notify them when a teacher leaves the district mid-year in the future.

Cohasset exploring club girls' ice hockey team

The School Committee approved the formation of a club girls' ice hockey team on Wednesday night. The team will be a cooperative team with Scituate High. The proposal came together over the last few weeks, so Athletic Director Ron Ford was hesitant to ask the School Committee to create a varsity sport.

"We can't march out a varsity team in three months," said Ford.

The program had many variables — interest in the student body, fundraising and availability of ice time.

"I want at least a year lead time on this," said Ford. At the end of the 2007-2008 school year, Ford tried to locate another area town interested in a cooperative team, but found no takers. A few weeks ago, Scituate approached him again about the program.

With the club status, Ford hopes the program will gain interest and in a couple of years the team could become a self-funded cooperative team, like the swim team.

Ford will return to the School Committee in the spring to re-evaluate the program.

David will be reading and signing his new book "Too Many Toys" about a little boy with too many toys. The house is overflowing and his mother says it is time to give some away, a daunting task for any kid. The subject allows Shannon to deliver more of what made his "David" books irresistible, bright colorful pictures and an irrepressible preschooler. David Shannon is an award-winning artist and bestselling author. He is the author of "No, David" (a Caldecott Honor Book), "David Gets in Trouble," and "David Goes to School." Shannon is the illustrator for "How I Became a Pirate" and "Pirates Don't Change Diapers" by Melinda Long." The event is free. If you are unable to attend and would like to order a personalized copy, call Buttonwood at 1-781-383-2665. What a nice event to attend.

TOWN HALL

The Cohasset Historical Society will host an Afternoon of History on Sunday, Sept. 21 from 2 to 4 p.m. The program is "Town Hall; Past and Future".

Since our historic town hall is being revitalized, this is an opportunity to learn about the building, its place in Cohasset history and what is in-store for its future. David Wadsworth will present the buildings past, starting with its inception in 1857.

Speakers detailing the options for Town Hall's future will include David Farrag, Chairman of the Town Hall Restoration and Renovation Committee and Jim Sandell, consulting architect.

There is no charge for this program and light refreshment will be served.

CUTE KITTENS

Oh my goodness, if anyone out there is looking for a cute new kitty or two, we have some news to share.

The Wrenn family of Cohasset has a beautiful new momma cat and several sweet baby kitties that are looking for some homes. If you would like to see a picture of them, come on by to the Our World Children's Global Discovery Museum (under the Paul Pratt Library) or give Barbara Wrenn a call at 781-383-9609.

CHILD CARE

Here is a great piece of news for some families around town. Sweet Relief Playcare, owned and operated by Lyni Previte, has afternoon openings for 3 and 4 year old children: Monday/Wednesday/Friday: 12-3:30. We are looking for friends who would like to have some socialization in this afternoon enrichment curriculum. There is a 10 child ratio with two teachers since the addition of Ms. Kelli Rodgers. Lyn has over 20 years experience, a fenced playpark, a brand new classroom and is licensed and insured. Come and have a blast with us! Please contact Lyn at 781-383-9723 to set up a peek at the program!

BLACK GOLD

Farmers refer to it as "Black Gold." Come on by and learn all about compost this Saturday, Sept. 20 from 2- 3:30 p.m. when Holly Hill Farm hosts a workshop devoted to the tricks involved in making this magical growing compound at home or in the classroom.

Instructor Janice McPhillips will discuss a "worm bin," one of the smallest compost operations going!

Cost is $15/person and $10/person for members of Friends of Holly Hill Farm, Inc., sponsor of the workshop.

APPLES

The Community Garden Club of Cohasset will meet at 9 a.m. on Tuesday, Sept. 23 in Bates Hall, Second Congregational Church, Highland Avenue, Cohasset. The public is invited to attend free of charge.

The speaker will be Nancy Hubert and the program is called APPLES, APPLES, APPLES. With slides, anecdotes and recipes, Nancy will provide an overview of the natural, social, and economic history of the apple.

The program reflects her interest in the preservation of historic landscapes - in this case the apple orchard. If you have an interest in the club and its activities or just an interest in this program, please join us.

A NIGHT TO BOND

Ian Fleming's 100th anniversary and the premier of the next James Bond movie set the stage for Wellspring Multi-Service Center 's fall gala. On Sept. 27, For Your Eyes Only – A Night to Bond for Wellspring will capture enough glamour and excitement to impress any James Bond or Bond Girl, but will (thankfully) lack the danger! An historic home overlooking Hingham Harbor gets transformed into a James Bond set that guarantees a view to a thrill. Over 200 taste-makers from the South Shore and Boston will be dressed to kill for an evening of fine food and beverages, entertainment, music by Dr. No and the Martinis and a silent auction that includes travel packages, wet suits, golf outings and exquisite paintings from12 notable South Shore artists who were invited to participate. For Your Eyes Only committee members from Cohasset, Hingham, Hull and Scituate have been astonishing each other with their imaginative ways of working the James Bond theme into all aspects of the event. The committee met throughout the summer and each meeting contained at least one Omigosh! Bravo! moment when members came up with = a new idea or donation. The combination of a cause that touches everyone's heart, a connected group of dedicated volunteers and a killer theme promises that For Your Eyes Only will be an amazing party for a compelling cause. Guests will enjoy food stations by Burton's Grill, Hingham; dessert and appetizers by Square Café, Hingham; a 007 Martini Bar thanks to A Street Liquors and champagne imported from Champagne Henriot.

The party begins at 6:30, Saturday, Sept. 27.

CORN FESTIVAL

Hayrides and 4H farm animals are always popular at the Corn Festival, South Shore Natural Science Center, Norwell. Enjoy a day of fun with the family at the 32nd annual Corn Festival, Saturday, Sept. 20 (rain date Sept. 21) from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. at the South Shore Natural Science Center, Jacobs Lane, Norwell. Other activities include: Bob the Balloonist will twist and sculpt balloons into animals, flowers and hats from 11-noon – with environmentally friendly balloons. Other activities include children's games and crafts, a moonwalk, face painting, 4H farm animals, and craft booths and demonstrations along with plenty of food including hotdogs and baked goods, and all things related to corn with corn chowder, corn on the cob, popcorn and corn salad. View the Web site www.ssnsc.org for a complete schedule of events. Admission is $5 for adults ($4 members) and $3 for children over 2 years of age ($2 members). Maximum fee of $20 per family.

Cohasset residents join Jimmy Fund Walk this Sunday

Five Cohasset residents will be participating in the 20th annual Boston Marathon Jimmy Fund Walk, Sunday, Sept. 21, to join the fight against cancer.

Allyson Andrews, Jane Henderson, Beth Golden, Ashley Faber and Digna Moneypenny will be among the more than 7,000 walk participants, who are expected to raise $7.2 million for cancer research and care for children and adults at Dana-Farber Cancer Institute.

In the past 19 years, walkers and their supporters have contributed more than $51 million to Dana-Farber. This funding supports cancer research to find cures and better treatments for all forms of the disease. It also provides special services and assists with costs of patient care and treatment.

The Boston Marathon Jimmy Fund Walk is the only event, other than the Boston Marathon itself that is sanctioned by the Boston Athletic Association to use the historic 26.2-mile route from Hopkinton to Boston. Walkers can choose from five different routes: 26.2 miles or 13.1 miles from Hopkinton; 13.1 miles from Wellesley; 5 miles from Boston College; or the 3-mile route that begins at the Harvard Medical School Quad, at 2 p.m.

Participants on the Hopkinton and Wellesley routes must raise a minimum of $250 in contributions; for the Boston College route and the Boston Walk, the requirement is $250 for walkers age 13 and older and $100 for walkers age 12 and younger.

Pacesetters, those who raise $1,000 or more, receive special recognition from the Jimmy Fund, and are invited to a celebration at the start of the next walk season. Participants are encouraged to form teams and walk in honor of those who have been affected by cancer.

One in three people will face cancer in their lifetime but no one has to face it alone. Help change the odds by walking or supporting a walker. To register, or make financial contributions, visit the Web site at jimmyfundwalk.org. Contributions can also be mailed to: Boston Marathon Jimmy Fund Walk, 10 Brookline Place West, Sixth Floor, Brookline, MA 02445. For more information, call 866-JF-1-WALK.

Up to the challenge

Bike ride latest in long list of accomplishments for Special Olympics athlete

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Competing in athletics takes a lot of grit, determination, hard work and passion.

Jessie MacDonald has all that and more.

A Special Olympics Massachusetts athlete and lifelong Cohasset resident, MacDonald is a multi-sport contender and a focused athlete. Since 1993, she has competed in the Special Olympics in 12 different sports.

This past weekend, she completed a 22-mile bike on the North Shore as part of the "Ride with the Champions," a benefit ride for the Special Olympics.

Always setting challenges for herself, MacDonald chose the longer route to bike.

"I decided to ride the 22-mile bike ride because I like to challenge myself. I knew if I did the 12-mile one I would finish early and the longer the ride the more land to see and explore the town you don't really know much about," said MacDonald, 34. The race started and ended at the Topsfield Fairgrounds.

Jessica "Jessie" MacDonald shows off the bike she used to complete a 22-mile bike ride to benefit Special Olympics.

"The Ride with the Champions was an experience for me," said MacDonald. Personally, she raised $300 and the event raised more than $100,000 for Special Olympics.

But, this most recent competition is only the tip of the iceberg for MacDonald.

She has trained and competed in alpine skiing, swimming, basketball, bowling, fishing, golf, power lifting, snowboarding, soccer, softball, track and field and tennis.

"It's kind of hard to choose (a favorite sport)," said MacDonald, but admits softball definitely ranks high on her list. Softball, bowling and soccer were among the first sports she competed in.

With a determined and competitive spirit, MacDonald loves to go to the Special Olympics events not only to test her own athletic prowess but also to cheer and visit with friends.

"I've met friends at the state games and the world games that I don't really get to see until the next event," said MacDonald. For her, one of the most rewarding aspects of the Special Olympics is meeting new friends and visiting friends she doesn't get to see that often. She keeps in touch with her fellow competitors and teammates by e-mail.

A few years ago, MacDonald became a "Global Messenger" for Special Olympics.

"(My role) is to spread the word about Special Olympics," said MacDonald. Through the role, Klete Squires, Associate Section Director at Special Olympics Massachusetts,, said she has really grown as a person. Self-described as shy, being a Global Messenger requires MacDonald to get up in front of both small groups and large audiences to speak about Special Olympics.

Squires worked with MacDonald as she completed her Global Messenger training and learned how to write and give a speech.

Special Olympian Jessica MacDonald holds her Special Olympics Hall of Fame Medal that was awarded to her at a ceremony at Harvard University.

"She is a model athlete in so many ways," said Squires. The normally reserved MacDonald learned to speak in public and break out of her shell a little bit, he said.

Despite the challenges of the role, MacDonald knows its importance.

"Getting the word out about (the organization) helps Special Olympics," in fundraising and raising awareness, said MacDonald.

Earlier this year, MacDonald received the prestigious honor of being inducted into the Special Olympics Massachusetts Hall of Fame at a black tie event held at Harvard University. She was one of only 11 Special Olympics athletes to receive the honor.

"It made me feel proud of myself," said MacDonald of the honor.

MacDonald joins in for nearly every Special Olympic event, including the annual "Passion Plunge" where participants dive into the frigid February waters of Nantasket Beach in Hull to raise money and awareness for the Special Olympics.

MacDonald also works part-time at the Hanover YMCA and often trains there for her events. During the current fall season, she is participating in soccer and tennis. To play soccer, MacDonald travels to Newton to play on the "Newton Hooligans" team.

"Jessie does so many sports to participate she bounces around from team to team," said Squires, which is something Special Olympic organizers encourage their participants to do.

Squires said she is not afraid to pick up a new sport and when her competitive streak kicks in she can be unstoppable. Of her many accomplishments is her power lifting. She can dead lift 350 pounds, squat 320 pounds and bench press 150 pounds.

Yet, MacDonald keeps a grounded perspective on the competition and her success.

"I think of it as if I get a medal, it's a good feeling; if I don't, it gives me a good feeling just to represent the team and compete," said MacDonald.

MacDonald shows no sign of slowing down. Earlier this week, she began her training for the World Games where she plans on competing in the skiing events. At the 2001 Winter Games, which took place in Alaska, she returned with a gold in downhill skiing and a bronze in the giant slalom.

"Doing these activities allows me to do the things I like best in my life and to challenge myself to be a better athlete," said MacDonald.

Special Olympics Massachusetts (SOMA) provides year-round sports training, athletic competition and other related programming for over 10,000 athletes with intellectual disabilities. Through the power of sport, our movement transforms the lives of people with intellectual disabilities and unites everyone by fostering a sense of community and building a civil society.

Author of 'The Case for Make Believe' to speak at Inly School

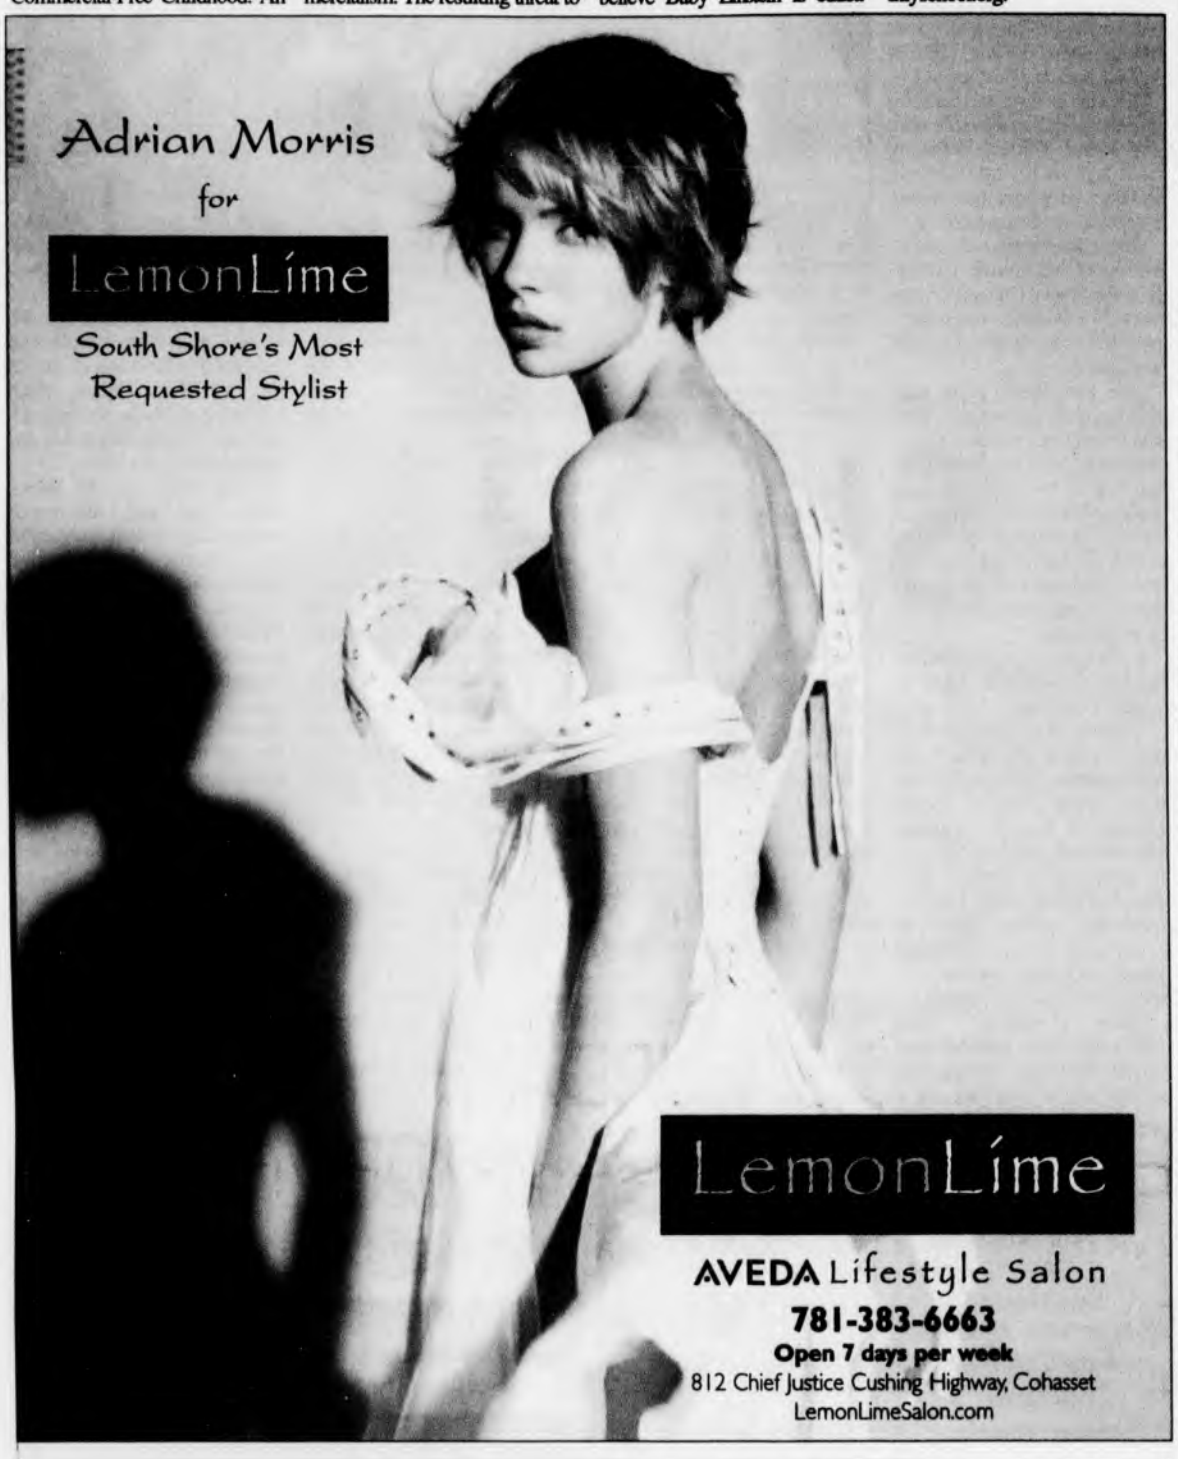
Psychologist, professor and award-winning producer Susan Linn, author of the new book "The Case for Make Believe: Saving Play in a Commercialized World," will speak at Inly School in Scituate at 8:45 a.m., on Friday, Sept. 19, in the library. Part of the Inly Insight Speaker Series, this talk is free of charge and open to the public.

Linn is associate director of the Media Center at Judge Baker Children's Center; instructor of psychiatry at Harvard Medical School; and co-founder and director of the Campaign for a Commercial-Free Childhood. An award-winning ventriloquist internationally recognized for her pioneering work using puppet therapy with children, she was mentored by the late Fred Rogers.

Linn will discuss her new book, which is on sale at Buttonwood Books and Toys in Cohasset. Reading the book is not required for participation – just a willingness to learn and be engaged by thoughtful conversation.

In "Consuming Kids: Protecting our Children from the Onslaught of Marketing & Advertising," Linn provided a look at how modern childhood is molded by commercialism. The resulting threat to children's play is the subject of her new book. In "The Case for Make Believe," Linn argues that, while play is crucial to human development, nurturing creative play in modern-day America is not only counter cultural – it's a threat to corporate profits.

At the heart of the book are stories of children at home, at school and in a therapist's office using make believe to grapple with real-life issues from entering kindergarten to the death of a sibling. In an age when toys come from TV shows, dress-up means wearing Disney costumes and parents believe Baby Einstein is educational, Linn lays out the links between play, creativity and health, showing why people need to protect children from corporations that aim to limit their imaginations.



A Montessori-based school serving toddler through middle School students, Inly follows a hands-on, experiential approach that balances the social and emotional growth of the child. Its academic curriculum is individualized and aligns with state standards at all grade levels. The Inly campus is just off Routes 3A and 123. For directions and more information, visit the Web site at inlyschool.org.

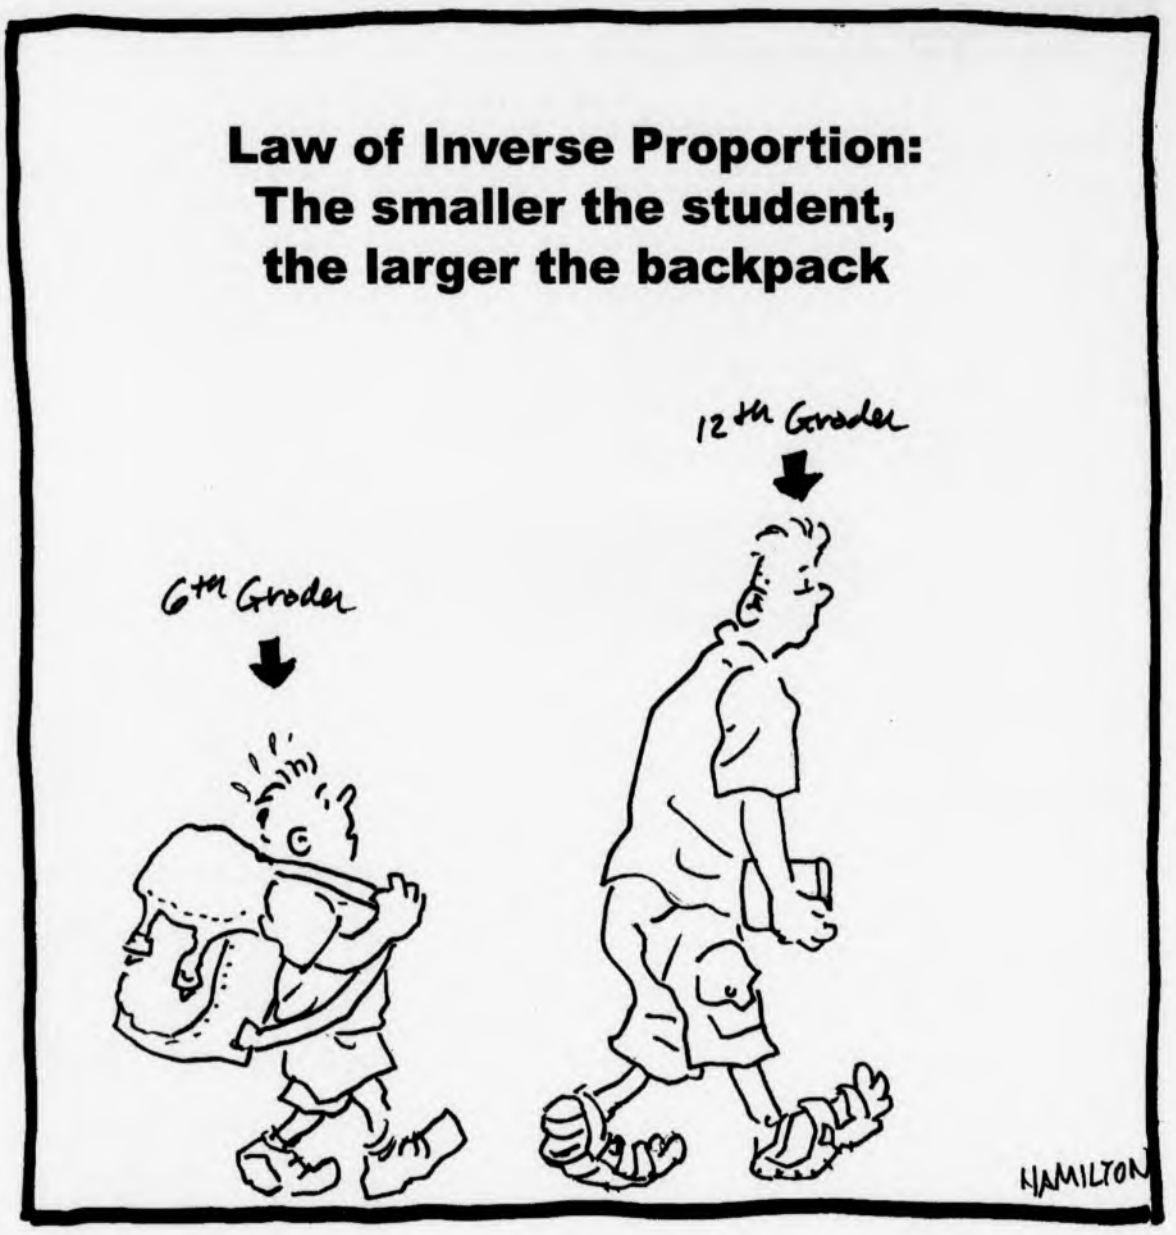
OPINION

EDITORIAL

More than ever, it's important to vote

Since 2000, it has become a cliché to say that each presidential election is the most important of our lifetime.



But it's one cliché that becomes truer with each presidential election. Consider the events of the past eight years: The U.S. was attacked seven years ago this month and since then has been engaged in two wars abroad. Those wars, in which victory is neither assured nor in sight, have resulted in the deaths of thousands of America's young people and are a severe drag on the federal budget.

Meanwhile, the chief justice of the Supreme Court died and another justice retired. Recent appointments have pushed the court to a solid 5-4 conservative majority. Moreover, the more moderate and liberal justices are aging, with liberal Justice John Paul Stevens approaching his 89th birthday next year. The next president will surely have an large impact on the makeup of the Court moving forward.

Then there is the federal budget, which will continue to have record deficits in the coming years, unless Congress and the next president slash spending or raise taxes, according to the Congressional Budget Office. Congress has not acted to ensure that Social Security will be solvent for the generations following the baby boomers. The nation's infrastructure continues to crumble.

Then there's the economy. In the last three days, Wall Street has been transformed overnight with the failure of former financial giants related to the housing and subprime mortgage crisis.

So urging our readers to educate themselves on the issues and vote on or before Nov. 4 is an easy case to make.

Current results for poll on wind turbines

A developer is before the Planning Board with a proposal to install two wind turbines off Route 3A. The project application, put forth by a private developer, CCI-Energy, proposes the installation of two 1.65-megawatt sized wind turbines sited on the Graham Waste Services site located on the hill behind Hingham Lumber. The application is the town's first under the Wind Energy Conversion Facility bylaw passed at the 2008 Annual Town Meeting.

The turbines will be 141-meters tall (including the height of the blades) which converts to 462-feet. The proposed turbines are larger than Hull Wind II which is situated next to the Weir River.

The project is shaping up to be highly controversial. The first of what will likely be several Planning Board public hearings on the project was held Monday (Sept. 8). Residents of Sanctuary Pond Road and the Avalon apartment complex developers came out in opposition of the project. Others, some who live near the Hull turbines and members of the Alternative Energy Committee, spoke in favor of the project.

Question: What's your opinion on the proposed wind turbine project?

Answers	Votes
• Wind power is the wave of the future. Cohasset should welcome this development.	141
• The impacts on Cohasset residents will be too great and it doesn't meet the zoning guidelines	94
• I'm holding off judgment until the turbine developer provides the Planning Board with more information	40

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

A day to remember

TO THE EDITOR:

Without equivocation, The Cohasset Mariner has been there for the EDC and our partner, the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce, in support of the idea for Cohasset Day from our very first meeting with Nancy White and Mary Ford many months ago. We have relied on their excellent reporting and Cohasset Day updates to support our efforts and keep the public informed. Your reporting has been a true source of moral and functional support. I am sure that we would all recommend Nancy and the Mariner for a Pulitzer for Cohasset Day coverage.

We look forward to next week's Mariner issue when you will treat us with your coverage of the day's events and with lot's of great photographs – hopefully in color.

The EDC created – through its new charter – the idea for Cohasset Day, which was approved by the Board of Selectmen October 2007. Specific plans were then drawn up by the EDC and presented to the BOS, which they approved in early 2008. After nine months of planning and building a logistical infrastructure and cadre of support people, Cohasset Day is soon to be a reality.

On behalf of the EDC, I would like to take this opportunity to thank all those who have contributed their valuable time, energy and ideas to bring the idea of Cohasset Day into reality. As you will see, many folks had multiple responsibilities.

Windy discourse

TO THE EDITOR:

Wind turbines will displace a significant amount of fossil fuels for generating electricity, although the huge demand from industry and from large cities can only be addressed effectively by substituting nuclear for fossil fuels. We are unlikely ever to achieve energy independence, despite the political posturing, but we must reduce dependence on foreign oil and greatly reduce the burning of all fossil fuels. Especially coal, which currently generates about 52 percent of the nation's electricity. (Nuclear produces 19.7 percent of our electricity, hydro about 7.3 percent, wind 0.7 percent, solar 0.01 percent, geothermal 0.9 percent, biomass 1.1 percent; total generation from re-newables 10 percent).

So clearly we need all we can get from improving efficiency of energy use, as well as from non-fossil sources. But offsetting all efforts to conserve electricity are ever-new uses for electricity, switching to electricity from other forms of energy for transportation and industrial usage, growing utilization of electronics etc.

So we are ill served by the NIMBY plague, which manifests itself in objecting to every source of energy (unless cited far away). Competent scrutiny of proposed projects is of course essential, but most of the public yawping (especially against nuclear energy) is based on gross misconceptions and encouraged by full time activist organizations and by weak and ill-informed political leaders.

As for the wind turbines proposed for Cohasset, some of the objections are nonsense. For example, that the turbines may make a profit for somebody. Don't people realize that our high standard of living results from the vitality of the free enterprise system? Even if the financial viability is somewhat dependent on government grants, it is the profit motive that stimulates the necessary initiative. The former Soviet Union demonstrated the deadening effect of eliminating the profit incentive.

As to the allegations of noise and visual pollution, I have a friend who lives as close to Hull Wind 2 as it is possible to be, and who is quite comfortable with the machine. The Hull experience seems to be such that there is great enthusiasm for more.

By all means let us scrutinize the proposed wind turbines, but take conclusions of competent professional experts into account and discount objections that are emotional rather than rational. True, we will have to live with the final decision, but we also are having to live with the deleterious effects of having done too little in the past to reduce the use of fossil fuels, especially of imported oil. Our energy and environmental future depends on constructive activism, activism that recognizes the long-term good of the public at large.

More room to move on Route 3A

MAKING TRACKS

TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN

Greenbush Goings On — The MBTA project of widening Route 3A and Lower King Street is almost completed. During the construction traffic was very constricted, but now that's over. If you have driven through that area this week you will probably agree that there is significantly more room on 3A. Left turns, coming from the Hingham direction, can now be made into Lower King Street much more safely.

This week the MBTA was also busy in the Town Parking Lot. They added a new catch basin that will, hopefully, eliminate some of the standing water puddles. We worked closely with CBB, the contractor, to make sure the lot would be serviceable for Cohasset Day, even though the final paving will not be done in this area until next week. They were very helpful and did a very good job in this regard.

Greenbush-Wompatuck Bike Path — We continue to receive questions about the walk/bike path that starts on Route 3A at the Greenbush Station and crosses Route 3A, ultimately ending up in Wompatuck Park. To confirm, once again, this path is NOT OPEN. We have been in communication with DCR (Department of Conservation and Recreation) about the path. At our request, they have now been kind enough to post signs at Route 3A and at Sidehill Road, where it crosses the new path, stating that the path is not open. The reason it is not open is twofold: 1) The final surface has not been placed on the path yet. 2) At the entrance to Wompatuck Park there is a very large gate that is closed. The reason the gate is closed is that that portion of the park still contains some of the old unsafe structures that have not been removed. These make personal safety in this part of the park a potential serious problem. So, for now – No Admittance!

Another quick thing, there is a removable bollard in the center of the path. The reason it is removable is so that emergency forces can use the path for access, if necessary. However, CBB has not removed the large stones that were placed the prior to the installation of the bollard. DCR recently has asked CBB to remove the stones.

Greenbush North Main St. Crossing — We continue to see serious bicycle accidents at this crossing, in spite of all the warning signs that have been posted. Cohasset safety forces have had substantial dialog with the MBTA regarding the urgency of fixing this situation. On this past Wednesday, we were told that construction to fix this nagging problem could start as early as today (9/19/08). That would be great!

New Catch Basin Waiting for Cohasset Day

Please Keep Out

Old Beach St. Culvert

Little Harbor Project — This past week another batch of base coat paving was completed. Streets now sporting their first coat of paving are Smazell Lane, Sandy Beach Lane, an unnamed private road (all off of Nichols Road), and the Jerusalem Road end of Rust Way.

If you have driven in the South Main Street or Beechwood Street areas you probably noticed that the roads are a bit rough. We have worked with the Water Department and the DPW to prepare these roads for paving. By doing the preparation work now, these can be paved along with some of the roads from the Little Harbor Project. Unfortunately, the preparation consists of grinding the road surface back so the new surface will adhere well and the final road will not be raised too high. With these roads ready for paving the Town can combine this work with the Little Harbor paving to meet the minimum paving quantities for the lowest cost.

Beach Street Culvert — We have spoken about the culvert that will be replaced on Beach Street. When the new sewer line goes through this area, the culvert will need to be replaced in order to get adequate clearance for this and other utilities. Originally, this work was to have been done earlier this month. However, the stonework you see is going to be replaced by a precast concrete structure. The delivery of the precast components has been postponed several times. Now, it looks like we will be able to go ahead with the culvert construction around the end of September.

Getting this done shortly is very important. As you can see from the photo there is marsh and wetland alongside the culvert. Consequently, this culvert replacement had to be permitted by the Conservation Commission (ConCom). One of the conditions they imposed on the culvert replacement project was that it had to be done during the "dry" season. The reason is that there will be a much lower chance of having a large amount of water in the wetlands with a corresponding lower chance of affecting the fragile marsh area.

When the contractor does his culvert replacement work, Beach Street will need to be closed. So, those of you who routinely use Beach Street as an access road need to be aware that you may lose this route for about a week, once the construction starts. We'll try to keep you posted as we get closer to the "bewitching" day.

Farmer's Market — The Farmer's Market has had to seek an alternate site for when the water/sewer project reaches the Common. The Market tried a move to the Little League Fields on N. Main Street several weeks ago. But, that didn't work too well. So that site is off of the table. For now, the Market will stay on the Common until they absolutely have to move. It currently looks like the Music Circus parking area will be the alternate site for the Market. The location decision will be made one week at a time. We suggest that you call the Selectmen's office at 781-383-4105 to find the current location for the Farmers Market.

Dirty dancing in Bountiful

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

About 20 years ago, one of the more popular movies had handsome dance instructor Patrick Swayze rescuing pretty teenager Jennifer Grey from the clutches of an old fuddy-duddy, namely her father.

They called the picture "Dirty Dancing."

The phrase must have finally penetrated the great state of Utah because I learned last week that the protectors of all that was good 50 years ago have slapped a ban on "dirty dancing" at the high school in a place called Bountiful.

Dirty dancing is defined as "vulgar, seductive or inappropriate movements," and those who are caught in the act are to be escorted from the premises, even if the only participants left on the dance floor are the band.

Girls are forbidden to wear any dresses too tight, too short or too low-cut, and duennas will be stationed at the doors with rulers to measure the width of straps, which must be at least two inches wide. Sheer fabric … don't even think about it.

Boys will be rusticated for wearing "slovenly" clothing and T-shirts with messages "for protest, defiance, dissent or display obscene, illegal substances or suggestive words or pictures," which my experience tells me will leave them pretty much naked.

The list of no-nos, known formally as "Dance Participation Regulations," were handed out in printed form and every pubescent student — and some who weren't — was expected to sign. Those who didn't were banned from all school frolics.

"We're just giving them some guidelines so we don't have to deal with issues that are uncomfortable for them or us," said Principal Ryck Astle. "Some kids will say, 'We didn't know that.' With this in hand we can say 'Yes, you did.'"

A number of high schools of my acquaintance have codes of dance conduct but most of them involve leaving the student's Uzi at home or at least checking it at the door until the dance is over and he'll need it to get home.

I can understand the "dirty dancing" ban in Bountiful, since Utah is a Mormon state and the Saints are somewhat to the right of Queen Victoria, but what are the school folks in Chicago going to do about the new high school that could be opening in 2012?

It's going to be called the Social Justice High School-Pride Campus, with the welcome mat out for gay, lesbian, transgender and sexually questioning students in an atmosphere that is free of violence.

The Chicago school board is holding hearings on it as we speak.

I don't know about you, but I was once a sexually questioning student, which is why, after reaching puberty, I could be found at the Thayer Public Library's Quincy Avenue branch most Saturday nights looking up dirty words in the dictionary.

But I don't think that's the kind of questioning they have in mind.

Are we prepared for an emergency?

HEALTH NOTES

STEPHEN N BOBO

The recent experience of Galveston has once again prompted discussions and considerable concern about preparedness of facilities and towns in the Greater Boston area. In particular, Cohasset has a special problem since many of our roads are now torn up with limited ability for rapid traverse by emergency vehicles. For this reason, the centralized Public Health Emergency Preparedness organization for the Greater Boston area, known as Region 4b, has significant benefits, especially for little Cohasset. The region is staffed by a regional coordinator and others who are funded by state emergency preparedness dollars from Washington. We have made use of this largesse by equipping our emergency personnel with the newest technical gear and practices. Also, the 4b headquarters in Cambridge is able to render day-to-day assistance for all communities in the region including Cohasset. They provide guidance to local and state health officials on serving the needs of all 4b communities and assist local health officials with development of our plans for public health emergencies as well as helping with training and exercises that test these local plans.

In meetings here in Cohasset the 4b regional staff have facilitated the recruitment of over 60 qualified volunteers to support public health emergency response. The Region 4b Medical Reserve Corps has recruited more than 2,000 medical and non-medical volunteers from throughout the region. Cohasset has, with other Region 4b communities, participated with the Cambridge Advanced Practice Center in the development of procedures and supplied valuable resources that supplement our very limited capacity to manage the complexities of public health preparedness. These resources have been adopted for use by Region 4b and are shared, through the Massachusetts Department of Public Health with the other Emergency Preparedness Regions in the Commonwealth.

Representatives from Cohasset and the 26 other Greater Boston communities that make up the 4b network meet monthly to plan, train and conduct exercises for our respective towns to prepare for public health emergencies. Further they provide information to help implement a local emergency notification system that coordinates with MDPH to provide constant notification and communication capacity within the region. They assist in numerous other tasks including: developing plans for emergency dispensing site setup and operations; coordinating development of a model public health mutual aid agreement; designing a regional model for epidemiology services, including data assessment and communicable disease support for local communities; and measuring regional progress toward preparedness. This work has been shared nationwide through the National Association of County and City Health Officials and the American Public Health Association.

Some of the management and organization tools provided or available from 4b headquarters that Cohasset has implemented or is considering:

- Local Emergency Notification System: A centralized notification system nearing fulfillment to ensure 24/7/365 capacity to receive and respond to notification of public health emergencies.
- Mutual Aid: Provided sample and supported Cohasset's enactment of a model public health mutual aid agreement through leadership and advocacy training.
- Health Data Watch Reports: Created and distributed demographic and leading health indicators, allowing Cohasset to compare our health status to that of Region 4b and Massachusetts.
- Massachusetts Virtual Epidemiologic Network: Support services to Cohasset and basic technical assistance as needed using the Advanced Practice Center for Emergency Preparedness in Cambridge.

Regional Resources Database: To enhance mutual aid and information sharing in the region.

- Pictogram-based Signage: Developed a series of pictograms designed to promote universal access to Emergency Dispensing Site clinics.
- Staff Training: Developed and evaluated a series of training publications for mass prophylaxis operations including the mechanics of an Emergency Dispensing Site and facilitating clients through an EDS.
- Epidemiology Just in Time Training: Developed basic epidemiology training texts for staff on How to Create a Line Listing, How to Create an Epidemic Curve and Interviewing Techniques.

As to how well Cohasset is prepared, we won't know until it happens.

Bringing up Brodie

THE FAR SIDE OF PERFECT

DIANE K. DANIELSON

When my husband started playing with the infant at the next table while we were on vacation this summer, he got as far as raising an eyebrow in my direction before I cut him off with a "don't even think about it." You see, unlike him, I'm not exactly a baby person; I mean, I liked the one I already had, not that I remember too much due to sleep deprivation. But, I've always preferred children old enough to carry on a conversation and wipe their own bottoms (although not at the same time). On top of that, we already had a large blended family which means I spend my nights searching our kitchen for a secret door from which Alice of "Brady Bunch" fame would suddenly appear with a basket full of freshly folded laundry ready to make us all pork chops and applesauce.

Needless to say, with an already overflowing dinner table and no sign of Alice, more babies were not in this bunch's story. Yet, less than a month later, there I was at a local breeder, trying to find the perfect little fur ball to pacify my son's non-stop requests for a puppy. Surely puppies couldn't be as much work as babies, right? Look at them. At eight weeks, they're already walking on their own.

As I sat down in what looked like puppy paradise, I was immediately pounced on by an overly enthusiastic pudgester, his addled brain running in overdrive: "Me. Me. Me. Pick Me. Pick Me. Pick Me. Let's Go. Let's Go. Let's Go. Me. Me. Me. Let's Go. Let's Go. Let's Go!" Fortunately, I had read "Marley & Me: Life and Love with the World's Worst Dog" and while he was adorable with his energy and antics, I didn't want a life condemned to Puppy Prozac and Doggie Downers.

This is why I was relieved when I finally wrestled the butterball off of me to find that another pup had been sitting right beside me the whole time with his head on my lap. As I glanced down at him, he gave me a look that said "You done with the pudgeball yet? Can we go now? I need to get the heck out of here – that dog is nuts."

This is how I found myself bringing up Brodie despite my claims that I didn't want any more babies.

Fortunately, Brodie is calmer than most pups. But, even so, flip-flops have become the world's greatest chew toy; random undergarments find their way out to the garden; my grandmother's dining room chairs are the latest craze in teeth sharpening; and a least once per day, he gets his head stuck in some bizarre place. I also never really processed the fact that I would be getting up at all hours of the night to walk around the yard asking, begging and even ordering him to "go poopy." I have to admit, it's a bit difficult to sound authoritative when using the word "poopy" in a sentence.

After finally falling into a routine, Brodie decided to really test me by scarfing down a dead mouse he had found in my cousin's yard (courtesy of their appropriately nicknamed, "mean cat"). Before he could swallow, I wrestled him to the ground, pried open his jaws and put my hand between those razor-sharp teeth to remove what was left of the deceased rodent. My 10-year-old niece jumped up and down nearby screaming, "That's sooooo disgusting! That's the grossest thing I've ever seen!" She didn't seem to understand that she wasn't helping matters much. Clearly, if I thought about it for even one second longer I would've joined her in the screaming and let Brodie munch away on his petrified prey.

Luckily for Brodie, my mother's instinct kicked into overdrive and without that second thought, I reached down, grabbed it and tossed it far into the marsh (the dead mouse, not the dog). Then I sat Brodie down, looked him in the eye, and realized that while I was likely to suffer from some Post-Traumatic Rodent-Inspired Distress, he'd already completely forgotten the incident and was ready to go bury some more underwear in the rose bushes.

Not knowing what else to do, I resumed our nightly ritual of me following him around begging him to "please go poopy;" after which, I headed straight for the shower. My niece was right – that was pretty much the most disgusting thing I'd ever seen. But, I did what I had to do. After all, Brodie was officially part of our family now, which means you act first, ask questions later, and continue to love them unconditionally no matter what goes in or comes out of their mouths.

Diane K. Danielson is a Cohasset resident who is having way too many conversations about peeing and pooping these days. She and Brodie will be dutifully attending puppy school starting next week on the common.

to Jerusalem Road to North Main Street to Sohier Street to Depot Court. The cars will then regroup in the municipal parking lot and then drive from Brook Street down South Main Street to the Common, around the Common and back to settle along South Main Street in parked positions until 3 p.m. Most of the cars' owners will be on hand to tell the stories of their cars and answer any questions from car enthusiasts.

"We have a great cross section of cars and some cool classes including; pre-war, racing, and trucks," said Peter Richardsson, head judge of the event.

The cars will be judged on a traditional 100-point scale, which Richardsson has slightly modified. In addition to the awards chosen by the judges, there will be a People's Choice and a Kid's Choice. To encourage kids to get involved, a prize will also be given to the child whose vote best matches the "pro judges."

The event judges include Peter Brown (chairman), Peter Richardsson (head judge), Jim Theriault, and Jim Sandell. Kate Richardsson will serve as scorekeeper and Reed Westcott, 13, will serve as her assistant.

The Mariner caught up with some of Cohasset residents who will be a part of the event to find out a little about their cars and the stories behind them.

1967 Austin Healy 3000 MK III

One of only 1,000 1967 models made by British car manufacturer Austin Healy, this practically all-original car is a rare gem, said owner Al Moore.

"It was one of the very last few ever made," said Moore. In 1967, Austin Healy stopped production; only 70,000 (approximately) Austin Healys were ever made.

In the 50s and 60s, the hey-day for Austin Healy, the cars were built primarily as racing vehicles.

"They evolved a little bit and to the untrained eye they don't look much different," from the early models of the 1950s to the later models of the 60s. Moore said by the time 1967 rolled around "they were basically building antiques," because car technology had come so far and contributed to their ultimate demise.

"With a aluminum body and a big engine, they were not your town runabouts, by today's standards," said Moore, but on the racing track they were very competitive. Despite the rich racing history of the Austin Healys, Moore's particular car was never raced.

Moore bought the Austin Healy in 1970 from its the original owner, "it was practically brand new." Over the years, Moore has kept it in tip-top shape and describes the car as being in "extraordinary good condition."

The black top convertible has a white body and a red interior.

"In all the years I've had it I think it's been in the rain once to twice and that was only when I got caught," Moore said with a laugh. "I have it and I enjoy it."

1964 Porsche C

Dick Avery wouldn't trade his 1964 Porsche for any other car. The light ivory, black interior touring car was purchased in New Hampshire, interestingly from George Hamilton, the father of Aerosmith bassist Tom Hamilton.

Avery doesn't usually enter the car into car shows, but wanted to be a part of Cohasset Day.

"Mine is a wonderful little car, but it's never been totally restored. It's very nice, well-maintained and a delight to drive," said Avery.

The engine has a Volkswagen foundation, meaning the engine could be exchanged with an old VW bug, "it's a very basic car...the engine is stock with no high performance modifications," but that doesn't make it any less fun to drive.

"It's lightweight, roomy—four adults can go to dinner," said Avery. It gets pretty good gas mileage, too – 25 miles per gallon.

"Now that it is old and precious, I only drive it on nice days," said Avery. During the summer it comes out more often and, weather permitting, he takes it out for a ceremonial spin on New Year's Day.

"My kids all argue who is going to get it when I die, but I hope that's not for awhile," said Avery.

1928 Ford Model A Speedster

Each of the classic cars are unique in their own way, but being the oldest car of them all makes Brian Wilkin's completely restored Ford Model A speedster stand out from the crowd.

The daffodil yellow and white racing style body is nearly one of a kind. Wilkin said perhaps only one other exists in the U.S. Over the past year and a half, the two-seater black interior Model A has been completely restored.

"We've taken everything apart and put it back together," said Wilkin, adding at one time the entire engine was just in a big bucket. Each engine part was checked for wear and tear and some of the not-so-good parts were replaced by parts found on the Internet. The entire car weighs 1,600 pounds and has a 40-cylinder Model A engine.

He describes himself as not mechanically inclined ("but I've learned a lot") and has counted on a mechanic in Middleboro to restore the Model A.

"I think it is an eye catcher," said Wilkin. "It is an unusual car, there's nothing close to it."

To make this weekend even more special, it will be the first time Wilkin will get behind the wheel of the car.

"I'm really looking forward to it," said Wilkin.

Wilkin got into car collecting a few years ago, "I was going to retire and I wanted something to do besides play golf," he said. He bought an antique Ford, then another the next week, and in a matter of months he was the proud owner of three classic cars. Although he still has yet to retire, Wilkin knows the cars will be waiting for him.

"I'll have the hobby laid out for me," Wilkin notes with a laugh. He has joined local chapters of Model A, Model T and Porsche car clubs. He often travels to local parades and He currently owns five antique Fords, including the one that will be a part of the Classic Car Concours.

1971 Mercedes convertible 280 SL

It's only been his for a year, but Woody Chittick is no less in love with his car than any of the other car owners. Chittick purchased the silver exterior and dark blue convertible from another Cohasset resident.

"It didn't need much restoration, just some mechanical work," said Chittick. Not a car restoration enthusiast, Chittick just loves to drive it.

"It drives well, I love a convertible. It handles well. It truly hugs the road," he gushes. The Mercedes is his first sports car since he's been "grown up and married and had kids."

The car recently played a supporting role in his daughter's wedding. The bride and groom used it in lieu of a limousine.

"I enjoy it most when the weather's good," said Chittick. Some Cohasset residents may have seen him buzzing around town with the top down.

He'll give it a good washing before Saturday's drive.

was not a part of the executive session.)

Monday's meeting drew a smaller crowd than past Treat's Pond discussions, but the room was still packed with Sandy Cove residents and other interested citizens.

The easement issue was discussed in detail during the June 8 Selectmen's meeting, when Town Counsel explained to the board the easement deed was vague, especially when it came to how the town could use the easement. He reiterated this interpretation during Monday night's meeting.

"(The rights of access) is still unclear. There is evidence it was the intent of the deed to be able to access the pipe and that is the general widespread belief," said Ross. Legally speaking, that intent is not clearly spelled out in the deed.

From Chairman Carr's questions, it was evident the town was exploring several options to resolve the easement issue.

The town could file a lawsuit in Land Court seeking a declaration as to the meaning and scope of the easement. The town would have to prove the later deeds subdividing the Bigelow estate contained an error, omission, mistake or misdescription that deviated from the original Bigelow deed, which granted the town the easement to the pond and the drainage pipe. If Land Court agreed with the town, a monetary compensation would be awarded from the state assurance fund and the decision would effectively reform the easement to reflect the deed's original intent.

The other option is to make the Bigelow driveway and/or Lothrop Lane a public way, giving the town the right to access it. With this option, there may still be an issue in getting from the driveway to the beach/outfall pipe.

To create a public way the town would have to first acquire ownership of or an easement over private property, which it can do by purchasing those rights or taking them by eminent domain. Both methods of acquiring the land require a two-thirds majority vote of Town Meeting. To make the way public, the board would, among other requirements, have to lay it out as a public way (i.e., open to the public and the obligating the town to maintain it) and the layout would need by a majority vote approval at Town Meeting.

Ross said creating a public way was a "reasonable concept" given the town already performs services on the road like it was a public way (i.e. snow plowing). Near the close of discussion, Carr requested Town Counsel to begin drafting a Town Meeting article(s), if the Selectmen decided to pursue this option. A Special Town Meeting is scheduled for Monday, Nov. 17.

With those options in front of them, Carr turned to the several Bigelow driveway property owners to see where they stood in working with the town to find a reasonable solution. Carr said he felt a letter selectmen received from three affected property owners indicated they were not willing to work with the town to find a compromise.

"We have no objection to maintaining the pond or entering the pond," said John Connolly of 85 Atlantic Ave., adding he had consulted with three lawyers on their opinion of the deeded easement and all agreed it only applied to the pond.

"The beauty of that is we are trying to avoid a lawsuit," said Carr. "I happen to think the town has the right to service the pond and the easement around the pond and pipe."

Carr repeatedly asked Connolly if he was willing to work with the town to find a reasonable solution to the access to the pipe. During the meeting, Connolly never seemed to give a clear 'yes or no' answer to the question.

Later in the meeting, Connolly gave practical, legal and personal examples as to why he believed the easement off the Bigelow driveway was not the way to go. He said Lothrop Lane allowed for easier access.

Two residents of Lothrop Lane spoke on the issues and what they perceived as negative effects of having the DPW backhoe (which clears the outfall) go down their private lane and across the beach, including increased flooding. Although the town has used Lothrop Lane for a number of years to gain access to the beach and the pipe's outfall, it has never had the legal authority to do so.

Eli Manchester of 85 Atlantic Ave., one of the property owners the easement crosses, said the question of the easement paled in comparison to the greater stormwater issue plaguing the Atlantic Ave. area.

"We have spent a huge amount of time on this…this problem ought to go away so you can focus on stormwater," said Manchester.

Carr agreed, "I hope reasonable people will prevail. This is a very sticky first step to a bigger problem."

One of the issues with the Bigelow driveway access is during winter storms, when often the need to clear the pipe is often the most great, the driveway floods. Manchester suggested a compromise where the easement is used in the summer and Lothrop Lane in the winter.

To further complicate the issue, according to Ralph Dormitzer who spoke as a resident not as a Selectman (he has recused himself from Treat's Pond discussion as he is Sandy Cove resident), there is a somewhat worn walking path that has little vegetation on the Bigelow driveway side of the beach, but the town's easement and the pipe does not follow this path. Dormitzer said he measured 750-feet of vegetation covering the town's easement.

"We need to realize the realities of these things," said Dormitzer.

Selectman Karen Quigley clearly spelled out her view on the easement question.

"I think everybody agrees the town has the right to maintain the pond in its natural state, whatever that natural state is determined to be," said Quigley. Her definition of natural state included a historical connection between Treat's Pond and the ocean through Sandy Cove.

"I don't see how the town can maintain the natural state of the pond if it doesn't have a connection to the ocean," said Quigley. Further, she believed the town did have the right of the easement calling the town "derelict" in its duties if they did not fight to protect its easement.

Yet, Quigley saw there was an "elephant in the room" nobody was willing to talk about.

"There is such a willingness to have negative impacts on private property the town does not have an easement to," said Quigley, citing the Army Corps of Engineers proposal to construct a pipe through Whitehead Road to Whale Meadow or a pipe on Atlantic Ave. and using Lothrop Lane as a way to get to the beach to clear the Treat's Pond outfall pipe.

"Nobody has been willing to discuss, before tonight, the easement the town already has," said Quigley.

A recent letter from the Army Corps of Engineers on the $700,000 proposal requests the town indicate its interest in the project by the end of the month (Sept. 30). A letter from the Army Corps Chief of Planning John Kennelly requests that Selectmen confirm their intent to serve as the non-federal sponsor for the Treat's Pond Aquatic Ecosystem Restoration project and, if interested, identify a preferred restoration alternative.

The Selectmen can confirm the town's interest and choose a preferred option, but cannot commit the town financially. Only Town Meeting has that authority.

After all these years

Veteran Skippers knock off young Clippers for first time in over a decade

By Joel Racicot
JRACICOT@CNC.COM

Weird things happen during full moons. Werewolves, really high tides, maybe Dunkin Donuts will give away a free coffee with your choice of munchkin—stuff like that. Cohasset beating Norwell in girls soccer? Well, yeah that too.

The Skippers won 1-0 Monday night at home over South Shore League rival and longtime older soccer sister, Norwell (you know, the one that beats you at everything). It happened. After 11 years at the helm, take a breath, Deb Beal.

"Lets just say it is a big load off my mind," Beal said afterwards. "It is one of those things. It's not the be all and end all of soccer, but it is one of those things that is always on the backburner. It's always there and it's always on my mind."

Norwell's Bruce Emerson, gracious as always, was happy for the Skippers.

"I can't remember the last time they beat us. I have no idea. It has been a long time I know, [Deb Beal] is psyched about it."

Torey Hart (Sr.) scored the only goal at 6:20 of the first half. Christine Coner (Jr.) had the assist. Both teams played fairly even after that. The second half featured a few opportunities for both teams, none closer than a ball that skirted inches from the far side of the Skippers net on a pass in by Norwell late in the game.

It was the fluke type goal that would have been typical on this full moon. But maybe the earth was a little off its axis. Pulled just so slightly to the left.

"I think that they are on a mission," Emerson said about

Win number two

Franklin gets game-winner against Clippers

By Susan Franklin
CORRESPONDENT

Coming off a tough loss to East Bridgewater, the Cohasset High field hockey team wanted a win to even its record. There is no doubt the team has talent. Team veterans have honed skills, game sense and the confident drive needed to lead on the field.

Many newcomers possess the athletic prowess that will translate to great skills in this game of speed and finesse. With only a few short weeks on the field together this group of talented individual players had not yet become a cohesive team, but the Norwell game Monday went a long way to getting them there.

Things started out a little slow in the first half. It appeared the players had a case of the Monday blues, but a short way into the half, things started to pick up. Verbal communication on the field was key, helping players work well together to deliver targeted passes and execute plays.

Midfielders Izzy Franklin, Lesen Haracz, Hannah Burgess and Natalie Dignan played very strong, getting passes up field to forwards like Erika Reardon and Jenny Cahill, who scored the first two goals from inside the circle. At the halftime whistle, Cohasset had the lead 2-0.

The team came out and looked even better in the second half as the defense led by Jean Thomae and Lucy Noble came alive, taking ball control and driving up the field. The Cohasset squad worked well as a unit putting together key plays between midfield and defense. Cohasset dominated possession time, making good passes and carrying the ball from one side of the field to the other.

However, control led to complacency and when Cohasset let their guard down, Norwell took advantage, putting two goals on the board to tie the score at 2-2. With little time left in the contest, Cohasset brought it home with a big goal from Izzy Franklin off an offensive corner. The exuberant squad left the field with a 3-2 win and that great feeling of knowing that each dedicated and enthusiastic player had today played like a team.

Cohasset played Notre Dame Sept. 16 and traveled to Harwich on Sept. 18. Come out to cheer them on as they host Nantucket High School Saturday, Sept. 20 at 10:30 a.m.

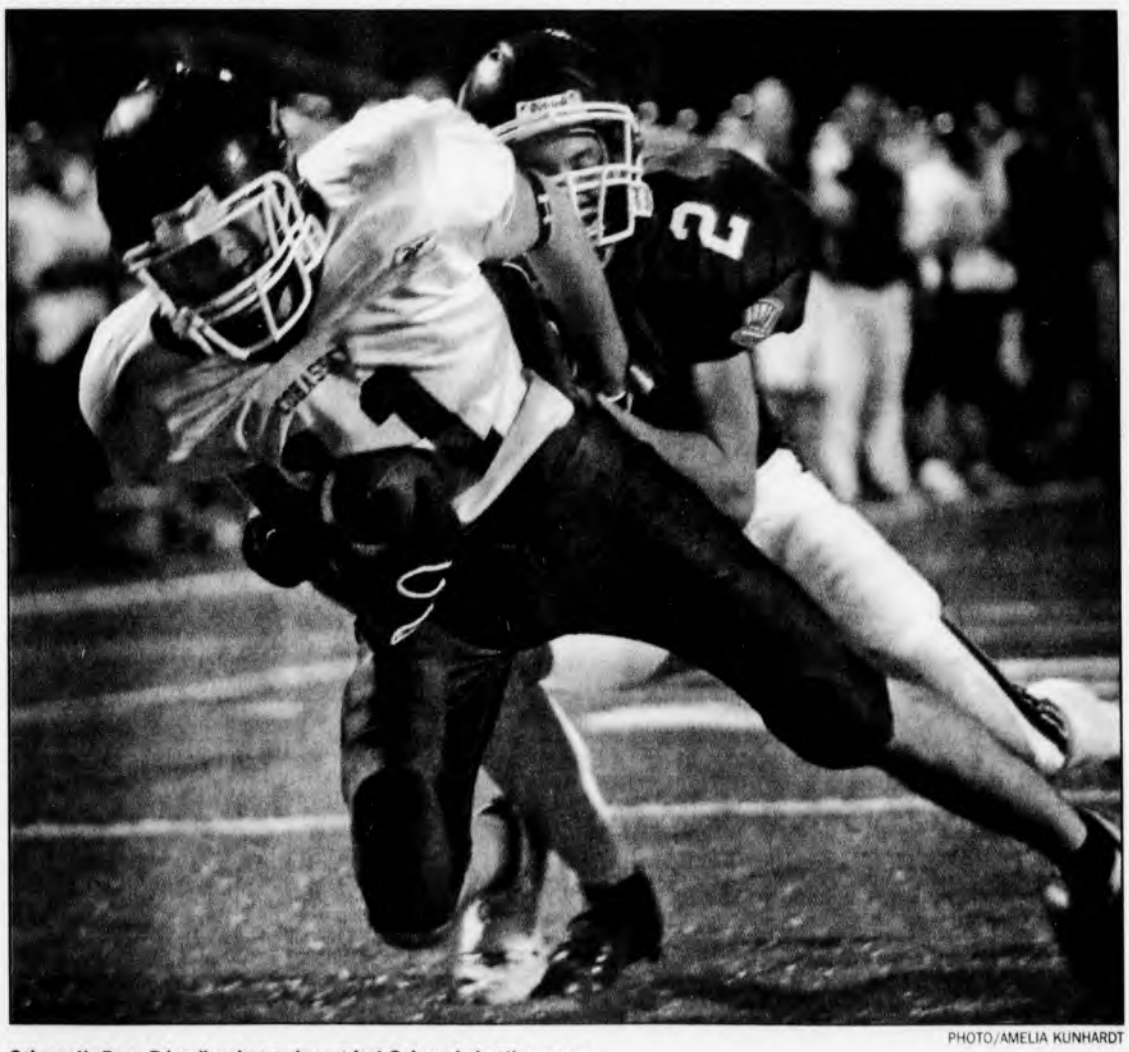
Archbishop Williams on deck, Scituate in the hole

By Joel Racicot
JRACICOT@CNC.COM



The Cohasset High School football team defeated Pembroke 20-14 at home Friday night. The Skippers are now 2-0 with both wins coming against Patriot League opponents.

They play next at Archbishop Williams Saturday for a 1 p.m. game.

Thomas Flibotte led the rushing attack for Cohasset, gaining 142 yards on 16 carries against the Titans. He also rushed for a touchdown. Jeff Cavanaro continued strong play at quarterback with a 5-for-12, 130 yards, 2 touchdowns and 0 interceptions performance.

Brendan Doonan had a pair of catches for 84 yards and two scores. Dean Driscoll added one catch for 37 yards. The defense played very well, albeit giving up a couple big plays.

Jake Kissick had a great game with six tackles, five assisted tackles and two tackles for losses. Anderson Lynner had two sacks and four tackles, including two assisted tackles, from the defensive line position. Alec Livingstone also provided a lot of pressure from the outside at defensive end.

"I'm very happy with what we are getting from the offense right now, although there is room for improvement," said Cohasset head coach Pete Afanasiw. "The defense needs to ratchet it up a bit. They are givng up too many big plays and too many points."

Afanasiw admitted that the team has made considerable improvement defensively, but he knows stiffer challenges lay ahead for his football team. There can be little room for error as the season progresses.

Dana Valentine was limited with an injury but should be back for Saturday. John Maher returned from an injury and played defensive back.

Cohasset led 7-0 at halftime thanks to a Doonan 79-yard touchdown reception in the second quarter. Doonan was on the other end of another Cavanaro touchdown in the third, this time making the score 14-0. Pembroke scored on a three-yard run after a miffed punt late in the third to make the score 14-6.

The Titans connected on a 68-yard touchdown pass in the fourth quarter, to tie the game 14-14

"It was a brand new ball game at that point," Afanasiw said. 'They had a lot of momentum. I told the guys that they haven't won too many games over the last couple seasons so they were hungry for this win. They were flying high, but at this point it was about staying composed."

Some hard running by Flibotte, and some designed sneaks by Cavanaro, set up Flibotte's 22-yard go-ahead touchdown on the ensuing drive with just over two minutes to play. Cohasset's defense managed to shut down the Titans for the remainder.

After all these years

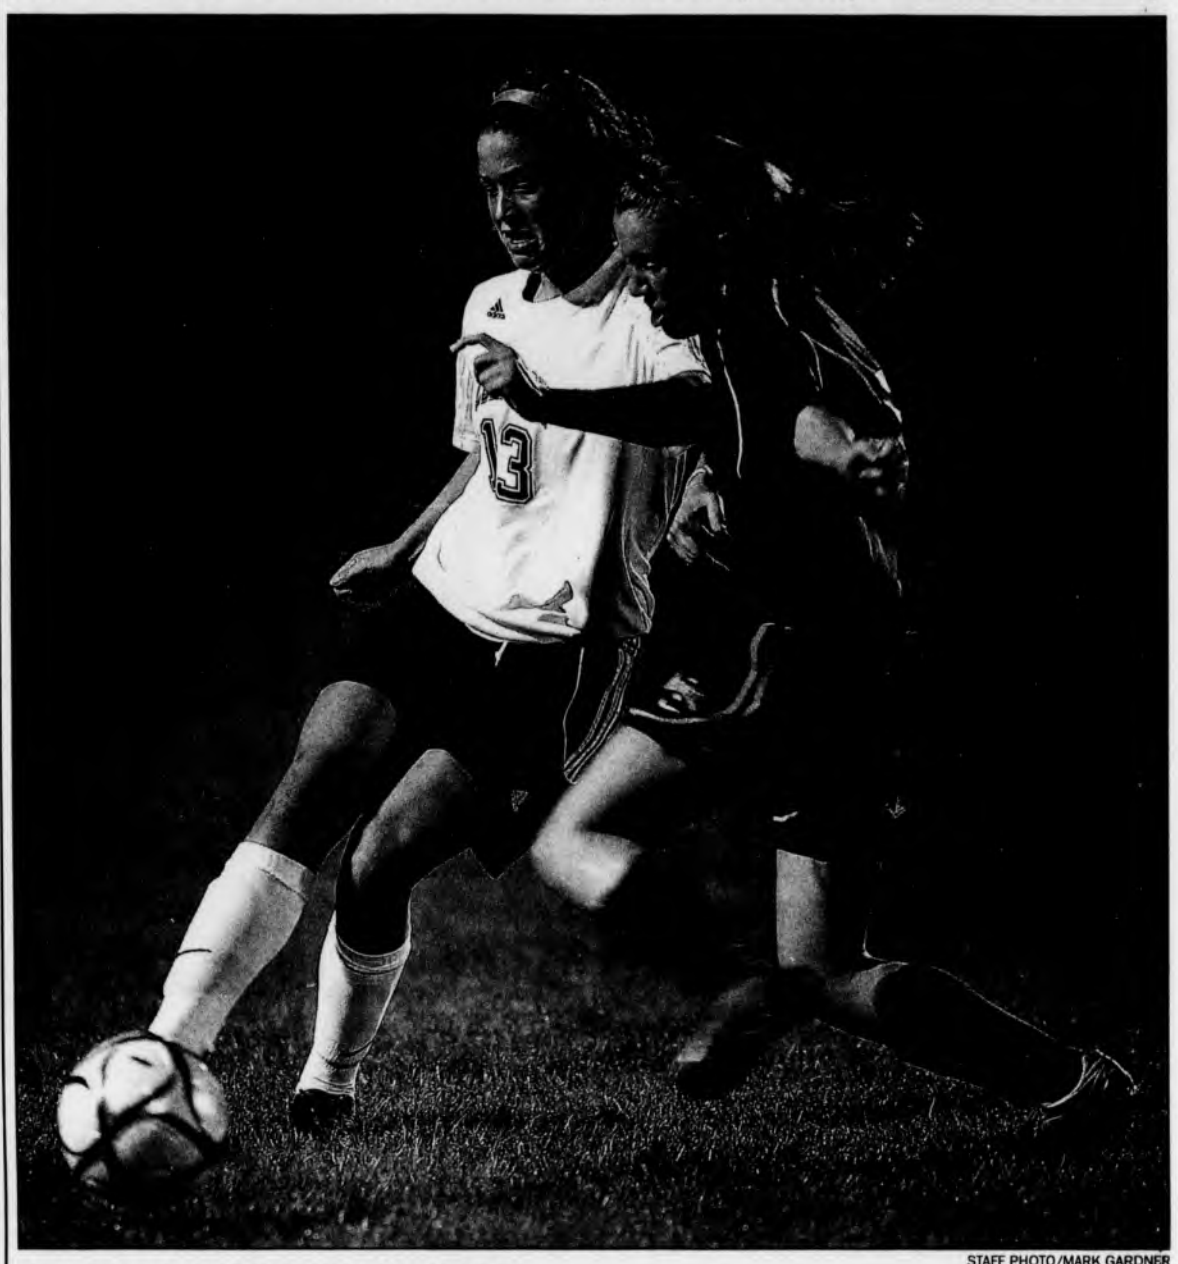
Cohasset. "They really worked hard. I felt all along they've been the team in the South Shore League to knock off, they have returned just about everybody."

Emerson did find a silver lining in the loss.

"I was pleased that we played them as we did. I was very excited at the fact that we play with a very young team and I think it bodes well for us for the rest of the season. We are young and I think we are going to gel and get better."



Cohasset's Charlotte Malone (Jr.) filled in admirably in net again for Johanna Brophy. Cohasset won, though, because of the defense in front of her. Sammi Lehr played everywhere from sweeper. Younger sister Tori, along with outside backs Meredith Kelly and Samantha Crough were tough as nails.

The type of defense that Norwell so often inflicts on its opponents, thanks to current stars Kara O'Connell, Molly Lodigiani and Jill Sheeran, was given back.

Looks like 2008 could be a special season for Cohasset. But given the intensity and limelight in the early September throwdown, this looks like it could also be a special rematch when these teams get together in Norwell, and possibly the postseason.

"We know Norwell, Norwell knows us," Beal said. "It's always a good game. It is fun, it is good stuff."

Cohasset played East Bridgewater, Wednesday, passed Cohasset Mariner deadline.

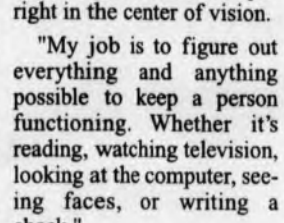
Massachusetts Eye Doctor Helps Legally Blind to See

Dr. Randolph Kinkade helps those with vision loss to keep reading, writing, and driving

By Elena Lombardi, Freelance Writer

Dr. Randolph Kinkade uses miniaturized spectacle-mounted telescopes and specialty lenses to help people who have lost vision from macular degeneration or other eye conditions.

Ever look through a pair of binoculars? Things look bigger and closer, and much easier to see.



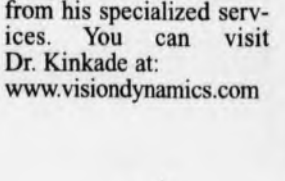
"Many of my patients consider me the last stop for people who have vision loss," said Dr. Kinkade.

Dr. Kinkade specializes in Low Vision Rehabilitation Optometry. He also has a Masters of Public Health and has adapted his studies to concentrate on prevention of disabilities related to visual impairments.

As a founding member of the International Academy of Low Vision Specialists he meets annually to advance the field of low vision with top optical designers and manufacturers. Visit other members at www.ialvs.com.

People with Low Vision have usable vision, but find everyday tasks challenging. Low Vision cannot be corrected with conventional glasses, surgery, or medication.

Dorothy Owens uses her glasses to walk in the mall, see faces, and watch television.



"In some states, Bioptic Telescopic Glasses can be used to pass the vision test for driving," says Dr. Kinkade.

"Amazing!" said Frank McKane, another patient of Dr. Kinkade's. "Why didn't I do this sooner. I can read without a magnifier now."

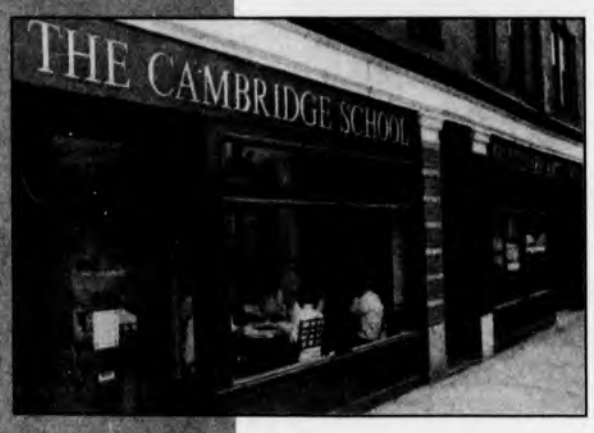
Macular Degeneration is the most common eye disease amongst the senior population. The macula is one small part of the entire retina, but it is the most sensitive and gives us sharp images. Macular Degeneration and other eye diseases often leave a blind spot right in the center of vision.

"My job is to figure out everything and anything possible to keep a person functioning. Whether it's reading, watching television, looking at the computer, seeing faces, or writing a check."

"Telescopic glasses for driving cost around $2,300," states Dr. Kinkade. "Reading glasses can cost between $800 and $1900."

Sally Konecny, age 91, reports, "I can once again see some piano music and watch Wheel of Fortune on television."

"Every case is different because people have different levels of vision loss and different desires," explains Dr. Kinkade. "If these specialty glasses are not able to help my patients there is other assistive technology available that can."



Dr Kinkade states "My patients with low vision have difficulty reading because print appears to be incomplete, distorted or broken." With proper magnification the ability to read is enhanced.

Dr. Kinkade sees patients at Newton Eye in Newton. He travels extensively treating patients with low vision with offices also in Connecticut, Rhode Island and New York.

Call (800) 756-0766 for a free telephone consultation to see if you or someone you know can benefit from his specialized services. You can visit Dr. Kinkade at: www.visiondynamics.com

Clippers best CHS boys late

Skippers rebound with tie Wednesday

By Joel Racicot
JRACICOT@CNC.COM

Things haven't come easy for the Cohasset High School boys soccer team early on, nor will they as the season progresses. Youth combined with a very even and competitive schedule should make for a lot of close ball games, similar to Monday's 1-0 home loss against Norwell.

The goals have not come easy for the Clippers this year either, but they kept pressing against Cohasset. With a good size crowd on hand for the first of a double-header, the sense of urgency grew as the minutes counted down in the second half.

The league is very balanced this year. It's neither top heavy or bottom heavy according to Willis and Norwell head coach Jack Browne. That makes for a good game almost every time out.

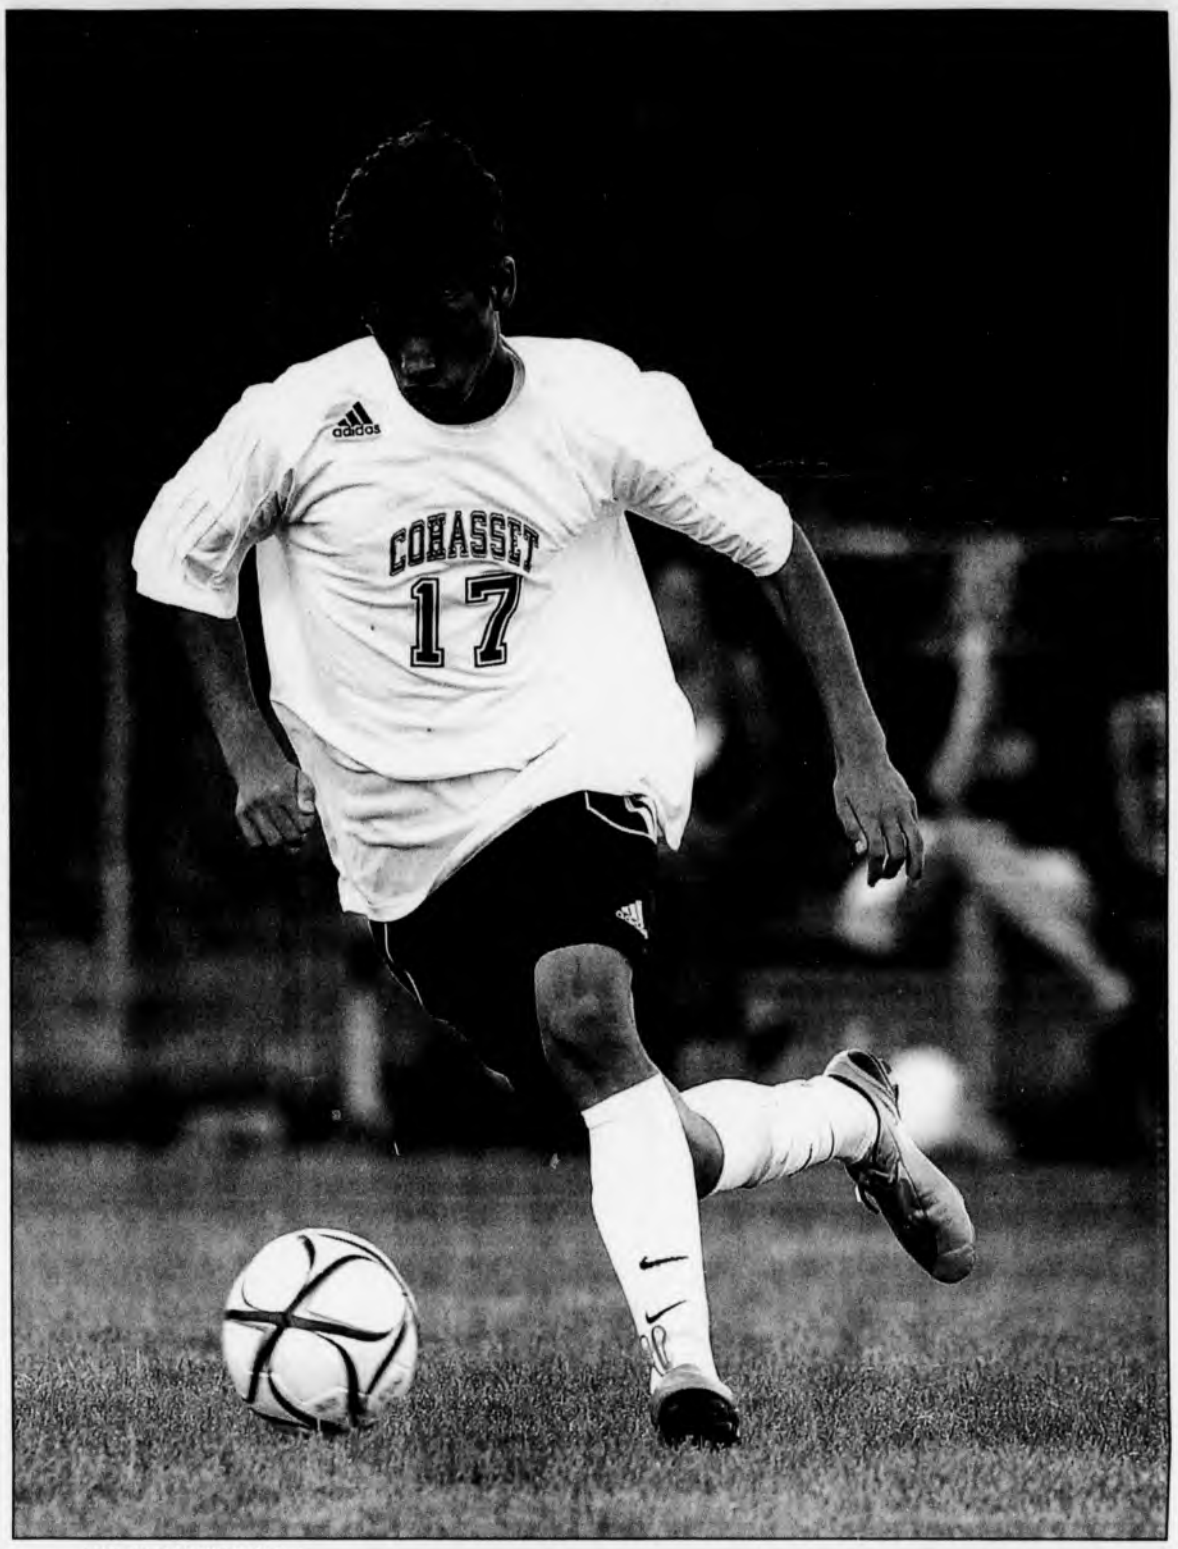
After a free kick by PJ Tribuna with only a few minutes remaining, the ball fumbled around in the goal box. Carton picked up the ball and found the back of the net for the game-winner.

"I got a good foot on it," said Norwell senior Bryan Carton. "I thought I might have sliced it but it turned out pretty well."

The win is Norwell's first of the year. Cohasset coach Jim Willis acknowledged that his team played hard throughout but slipped at the end.

"Today was the best game they played until the last minute and a half and they got a call they didn't like and got disgruntled and fell apart," an obviously agitated Willis said after the game. "They're (Skippers) getting there. They have played better every game so far, tonight in the first half Norwell took it to us, but in the second half we actually controlled play."

The league is very balanced this year. It's neither top heavy or bottom heavy according to Willis and Norwell head coach Jack Browne. That makes for a good game almost every time out.

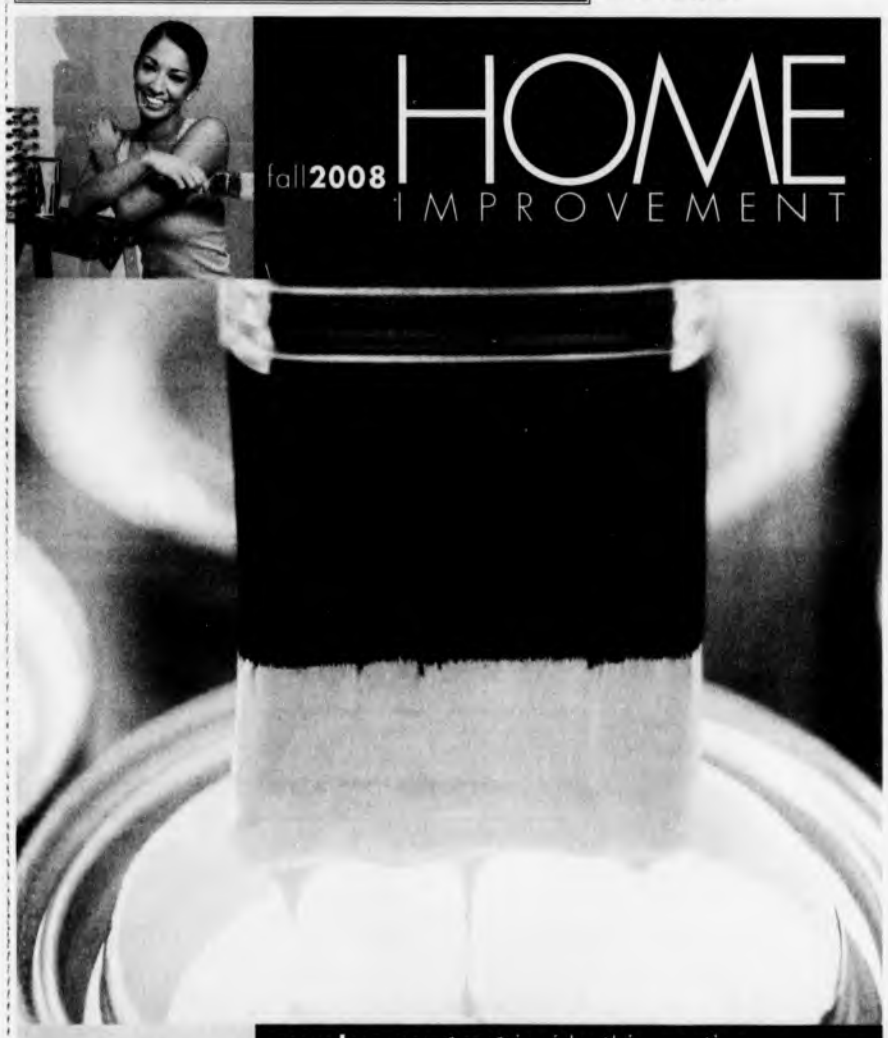


"It is a tough league this year," Willis said. "Last year there were really two top teams and a group in the middle, and this year there aren't any days off. The best team we played this year was Harwich and that was a 3-0 game and two of the goals were in the last two minutes."

Cohasset is 0-4-1 with losses to Scituate, Abington, Harwich and Norwell and a 1-1 tie Wednesday against another tough squad East Bridgewater. Ivan Sceery scored his first goal of the season in the tough road match, earning the Skippers a point.

Sceery, a senior, and freshman Jonah Adkins are relied on for much of the offensive push. Lennart Brown, the main scorer in the pre-season was moved to sweeper after the 5-0 loss to Scituate. Recent low score indicate the move is paying off, even though the Skippers have to sacrifice a lot of offense with the move.

"He has really stabilized us in the back," Willis said. "Unfortunately that has cost us in the offensive end. In the pre-season, we scored plenty and he was one of our big scorers.



"Now a senior and a freshman playing up front. Both guys are playing well individually, but they are still trying to learn how to play together."

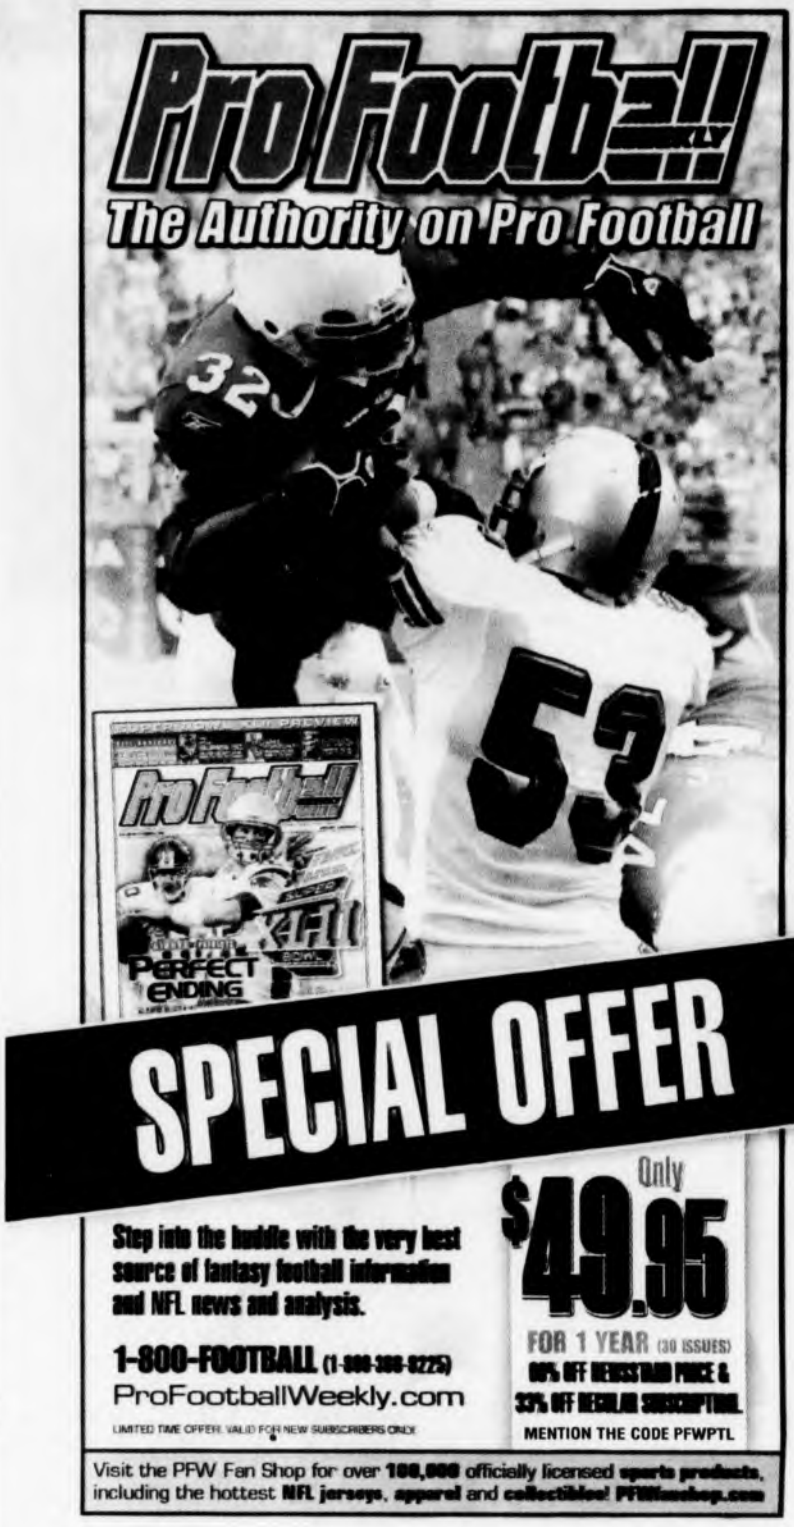
Going wild at Second Congregational Church



Steve Martin of New England Wildlife Center introduces his bearded dragon to the group.

Recently, staff from New England Wildlife Center visited the Sunday School of Cohasset's Second Congregational Church. Children ages 4 through 14 had the chance to pet and visit with some of God's creatures, including a chinchilla, a bearded dragon, a parrot, a hedgehog and a special snake with a flat snout named Pig. Lisa Cooper, Second Congregational director of Christian Education since June, has similar interactive activities planned throughout the year as a way to grab and keep the attention of the children while making the teaching of traditional stories of the Bible fun.

New England Wildlife Center, based in South Weymouth for nearly 25 years, provides veterinary and rehabilitative care to thousands of sick, injured and orphaned wild animals each year. Patients are brought to the center from individual citizens, families and animal control officers – and care is provided by a variety of paid, volunteer and student personnel. The center receives no state or federal funding and relies on support from donations, birthday parties, toddler playgroups and youth programs.

For information about the center, visit the Web site at wildlife.com or email Steve Martin at smartin@newildlife.com.

As the leaves turn

Barbara Radcliffe Rogers and Stillman Rogers
GATEHOUSE NEWS SERVICE

NEW ENGLAND — "We can look forward to another brilliant fall foliage season," said Ginger Anderson, chief of Forest Management for the Vermont Department of Forests, Parks and Recreation.

And although she was speaking for her own state when she made this prediction last week, experts in other states agree that all early weather signs point to a knock-out year for leaf-peepers.

While everyone wants to see the fall foliage at "the peak," that's actually a moving target. The leaves change day by day and region by region over a six-week span. Beginning in Maine, northern New Hampshire and Vermont's mountains in mid-September, the color rolls south through central New Hampshire and into Massachusetts, culminating in late October and even early November in coastal Connecticut and Rhode Island.

A classic Vermont foliage scene at Waits River.

Maine

Maine may be the Pine Tree State, but don't underestimate the number of maples and birches, with gold and orange leaves that stand out in bright contrast to the deep greens of pines and firs. Peak in northern and central inland Maine usually lasts from mid-September through early October - head to Moosehead Lake for excellent views. By the first week in October, the Rangeley Lakes and Rte. 27 through the Carrabassett Valley and Kingfield are ablaze.

The central coast usually reaches its color peak between Oct. 7 and 19, followed by the southern coast. See the wooded islands off Camden from the top of Mount Batty, on the way through the historic coastal towns on Rte. 1, and detour to follow roads down the many peninsulas that jut far out to sea. Keep posted via Maine's foliage hotline, 888-MAINE-45, or visit www.maine.gov/doc/foliage.

New Hampshire

In mid-to-late September, New Hampshire's leaves begin to turn in the Great North Woods, reflecting in the waters of the Androscoggin River along Rte. 16 through 13-mile Woods, or seen from Rte. 3 along the Connecticut River. In late September and early October, head north on I-93 to Plymouth, following Rte. 25 West then, at Orford, take Rte. 10 north or south along the Connecticut River - it's beautiful in either direction. Or leave I-93 at Lincoln to follow Rte. 112 over the Kancamagus Pass, for spectacular views of the White Mountains.

Around central New Hampshire's 275 lakes and ponds, where foliage peaks in the two middle weeks of October, roads wind through rolling countryside, covered bridges and pretty lakeside villages. The seacoast is the last area in New Hampshire to catch the color, even after it has faded inland. Many New Hampshire businesses are offering to help you pay for your trip with "Gas Saving Offers" (www.visitnh.gov/why-new-hampshire). For a map showing the day-by-day color progress, visit http://foliage.visitnh.gov, or call the foliage hot line, 800-258-3608.

Vermont

Vermont's foliage doesn't take the expected north-to-south route. Instead, in late September it begins simultaneously in the Northeast Kingdom and a strip down the state's center, where the Green Mountains form a long spine. It reaches peak here the first week in October, then radiates west and east, to the Champlain and Connecticut valleys, usually at their best between Oct. 10 and 20.

On I-91 you'll get the high route view above the Connecticut River and across to New Hampshire. Or leave I-91 at Brattleboro to follow Rte. 5 along the riverbank past farms selling fresh-picked produce. Rte. 9 leaves Brattleboro to climb Hogback Mountain, with views of three states, and then over the spine of the Green Mountains. A turn north in Wilmington follows Rte. 100 for the entire length of Vermont's mountains to Stowe. Get foliage updates at www.vermontvacation.com/seasons, or 800-VERMONT.

Massachusetts

In Massachusetts, Rte. 7 travels the heart of the Berkshires, where color peaks the first two weeks in October. A scenic drive on Rte. 20 leads west to Hancock Shaker Village and the Taconic Range. Foliage paints the farmlands along the wide Connecticut River in shades of red, orange and gold between Oct. 3 and 18. The Mohawk Trail (Rte. 2) connects this area with the Berkshires. Drive through Charlemont, and down the famed hairpin curve at the west peak of Whitcomb Summit, to Williamstown.

Cape Cod's foliage lasts longer, peaking the third week in October. Travel there via Rte. 58 through North Carver to see the cranberry bogs bright red with ripe berries. For pretty villages, tidy farms and fall-painted coastal scenes north of Boston, follow Rte. 133 through Essex, Ipswich and Georgetown. Massachusetts keeps travelers updated with its foliage hotline at 617-973-8500 or 800-227-MASS and at www.massvacation.com (click Science and Nature).

Connecticut

Fall color sweeps through Connecticut from mid-October into early November. Expect the best show in western Connecticut, where Rte. 7 drops down from the Massachusetts border through several state parks to Kent. In eastern Connecticut, Rte. 97 parallels I-395 and is designated a Scenic Highway - it travels through rural landscapes from North Woodstock, through Pomfret, to the Georgian architecture of Canterbury. Learn more about Connecticut travel at 800-282-6863 or www.ctvisit.com.

Rhode Island

Rhode Island's fall colors, like Connecticut's, appear mid-October to early November. For top viewing, follow Rte. 2 from Slatersville, near the Massachusetts line, south through charming Chepachet and then through farmland and forests to Wickford, on Narragansett Bay. Cross on bridges to Jamesown Island and Newport (where you can stop and check out the mansions) returning north on Rte. 114 along the other side of the bay. SCHOOLS

Clubs kick into high gear

LIFE AT CHS

LAUREN MACK

Hi everyone. It has been another smashingly successful week at Cohasset High School, filled with learning and high spirits! All of the CHS clubs have begun to start up again, and with meetings left and right, it's been hard to keep up with everything going on! Art Magazine had their first meeting this past Tuesday, and in addition to the magazine meeting, it has also been confirmed that the Art Major class will be repainting the murals in downtown Cohasset next to Tedeschi's. Auditions for "West Side Story" were held this past Wednesday and call-backs were on Thursday, everyone did great and fortunately there was quite the turnout! Tuesday was also the annual parent-teacher back to school night. So hopefully all of the parents got to meet all of the teachers that we students talk so highly of.

Speaking of teachers, allow me to introduce this week's Teacher Quote of the Week. It's a common sight to see Ms. Nina Berkowitz walking the halls of the school, always looking for creative ways to brighten and decorate our academic environment. Why, you ask? Because Ms. Berkowitz is the art department head of CHS, teaching several classes including Art Major, Portfolio Art, Ceramics, and many others. Just the other day, the question arose if administration ever questions her usually colorful and untraditional attire: "No, actually, it's quite the opposite," she responded, "art teachers can really get away with anything. They just kind of expect me to wear ugly clothes now."

I hope everyone has a fun and safe weekend! Adios!

SALOMES'S STARS FOR RELEASE WEEK OF SEPT. 15, 2008

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) Aspects favor new romances for unpaired Ewes and Rams. Already-paired Arian twosomes experience renewed harmony in their relationships. Money matters also take a bright turn.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) Use that strong Bovine determination to help you keep the faith with your convictions while you move through a period of uncertainty. Things begin to ease by the week's end.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) Pay attention to your intuition. It could be alerting you to be more careful about accepting a "statement of fact" simply on trust. Don't be shy about asking for more proof.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) Concern for the well-being of someone in need is admirable. But don't forget to take care of yourself as well. Ask a family member, close friend or colleague to help you.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) It's OK to focus on the demands of your career. But try to avoid misunderstandings by also reaching out to family and friends. Your sharp intuitive sense kicks in by midweek.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) Keep a rein on that green-eyed monster. Jealousy is counterproductive. Instead of resenting a colleague's good points, concentrate on developing your own abilities.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) Spending time on a creative project during this high-energy week can pay off both in emotional satisfaction and in impressing someone who is glad to see this side of you.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) Now is a good time to start planning that trip you've put off because of the demands on your time. Be sure to choose a destination that is new and exciting.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) That upbeat mood in the first part of the week makes you eager to take on new ventures. A more serious note sets in later to help you assess an upcoming decision.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) A high energy level gives the Goat the get-up-and-go to finish outstanding tasks before deadline, leaving time for well-earned fun and games with friends and family.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) Dealing with disappointment is never easy. But the wise Aquarian will use it as a vital lesson and be the better for it. A close friend has something important to say.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) Best bet is not to get involved in an argument between colleagues until you know more about who started it and why. And even then, appearances could be deceiving. Be alert.

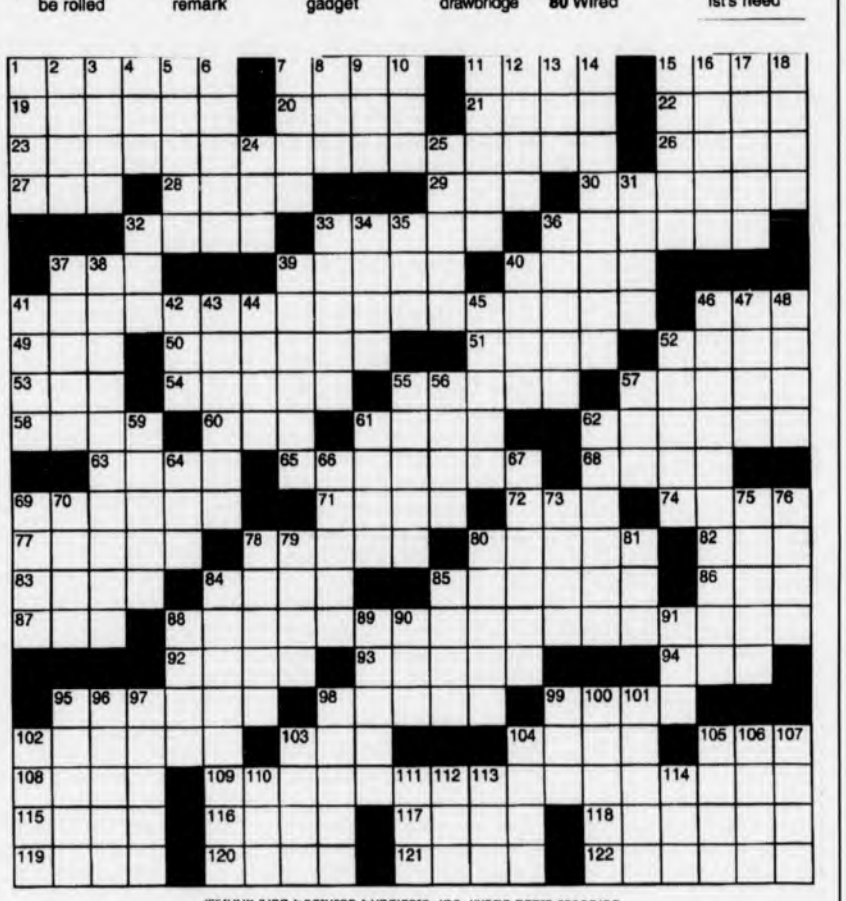
Fun By The Numbers

Like puzzles? Then you'll love sudoku. This mind-bending puzzle will have you hooked from the moment you square off, so sharpen your pencil and put your sudoku savvy to the test!



Here's How It Works:

Sudoku puzzles are formatted as a 9x9 grid, broken down into nine 3x3 boxes. To solve a sudoku, the numbers 1 through 9 must fill each row, column and box. Each number can appear only once in each row, column and box. You can figure out the order in which the numbers will appear by using the numeric clues already provided in the boxes. The more numbers you name, the easier it gets to solve the puzzle!

KING RICHARD'S FAIRE RETURNS FOR ITS 27TH SEASON

By Will Drayton
GATEHOUSE NEWS SERVICE

Visitors can travel back in time to the Renaissance as King Richard's Faire kicks off its 27th season. Stage performers and staff roam 80 acres in Carver dressed in period costumes and staying in character. Spectators often arrive in costume, too.

"Some of the people who have been coming for many years really do escape into the period,'" says Bonnie Shapiro, producer of King Richard's Faire. "Sometimes it's hard for us to figure out who are our performers and who are our patrons.'"

This year's fair has some new attractions, including a "Renaissance Idol'" competition.

"People will have the opportunity to perform in front of a panel of celebrity judges and one lucky individual will win the coveted title of 'Renaissance Idol,'" Shapiro said.

"Also new this year is the dashing Jacques ze Whipper, who flirts with danger in his show featuring a man and his whip.'"

Animals new to the fair will include Siberian tigers and "'ligers,'" a cross between tigers and lions.

"They weigh up to 900 pounds and stand 11 feet tall on their hind legs,'" Shapiro said.

This year's theatrical performance, titled 'Dis-Enchanted,' will feature lots of swashbuckling and swordplay. The plot line follows a beautiful lost princess and her dashing hero as they clash with an evil sorceress and her menacing minions."

Jousting matches feature professional stunt men who travel all over the country from fair to fair.

Vicki Donnellan of Weymouth said she enjoys watching the jousting matches and the stage shows.

"I'm looking forward to taking my kids this year,'" she said. "They love to dress up and really like the live animals.'"

Some musical acts are joining the fair this year.

"A loud and lively group of singers and guitar players called the Barleymen are joining us, as is Diabolis in Musica, who play Renaissance music like you've never heard before,'" Shapiro said.

The Lost Boys, a rock 'n' roll act that spoofs Renaissance songs, will also play.

Kids who come in costume can be knighted by the king and queen and can pretend they are a lord or a lady as they attend a puppet show and hear Renaissance stories and fairytales.

Shapiro created the fair 27 years ago with her late husband, Richard, a producer of live events and off-Broadway when he met Bonnie, who was a singer and dancer.

King Richard's Faire is open Saturdays and Sundays through Oct. 19, including Monday, Columbus Day. Gates open at,10:30am. Faire closes at 6 p.m. For information call 508-866-5391 or visit kingrichardsfaire.net

The Phil opens 93rd season

Karidoyanes celebrates his 15th season by conducting Beethoven's Ninth

The Plymouth Philharmonic begins its 93rd season with its opening concert Sept. 20, featuring Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, Ode to Joy.

He didn't' start the way he ended. The transformation was as dramatic as his symphonies, opening with effervescence, crashing through fury and soaring into triumph.

A simple lock of his hair may have revealed the culprit. Scientists found unusually high lead levels, indicating that the transformation of Ludwig Von Beethoven from cheerful youth into the tormented genius he became may have had physical as well as mental origins.

No one has ever been able to figure out the cause of his deafness.

Whatever the reason, Beethoven's journey to genius was a difficult one, fraught with the abdominal pain, depression, anger and despair that are trademarks of lead poisoning. His hearing was failing as he penned his last symphony, which is arguably one of the best pieces of music ever written, the incomparable Ninth, Ode to Joy. Out of his ruin came greatness.

It was his crowning achievement.

The Plymouth Philharmonic will open its 93rd season with Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

"There are pieces that become cliché for some, like Beethoven's Fifth Symphony," Phil Music Director and Conductor Steven Karidoyanes said. "But anybody to have the audacity to say something like that has never heard it live. Then you go, 'Ah, that's what makes Beethoven's Fifth great.' And Beethoven's Ninth makes it just that much better."

To listen and watch as the musicians sweat on the edge of their seats to recreate a masterpiece is truly a beyond-words-experience, Karidoyanes said. Hear it and see it live, and goose bumps raise on your flesh as you try to wrap your mind around the otherworldly power of a creator who taps into divinity the way people make ordinary phone calls.

Renowned soloists Barbara Kilduff, Victoria Avetisyan, Philip Lima and Neal Harrelson will perform, and The New World Chorale will sing the Ode to Joy finale.

"This is the only symphony Beethoven wrote with a chorus," Karidoyanes said. "It is, in essence, a symphony within a symphony. I'm always excited about people attending who haven't heard it. They will have their socks handed to them, not just knocked off."

The concert is set for 8 p.m., Saturday, Sept. 20 at Plymouth's Memorial Hall, with a pre-concert talk by Karidoyanes at 7 p.m. Tickets are $50, $45, $35 and $20 depending on seating. And join Phil patrons for a Symphony Soiree just down the block at Pilgrim Hall Museum, from 6 to 7:30 p.m., for $20 more ($25 at the door). Senior, youth and group discounts are available. Students may obtain $5 "rush" tickets one hour before the performance if the concert isn't sold out. Advance tickets may be purchased from the Phil office by calling 508-746-8008.

The concert opens with the National Anthem at 8 p.m., followed by Samuel Barber's Second Essay for Orchestra. Seeing as it is the Phil's 93rd season, Karidoyanes said it seemed important to pick a rousing American piece to celebrate America's Hometown.

"Not only is he (Barber) one of the great American Romantic composers, but being a songwriter and symphonist, he just knows how to handle a melody," Karidoyanes said. "It's very American and attractive. We're the orchestra of America's hometown. If we celebrate the orchestra, we have to celebrate America's music."

The 11-minute Barber piece will help listeners "cleanse their palet," Karidoyanes said, in preparation for Beethoven.

And, once the final notes are sounded, Karidoyanes will answer any questions the audience may have.

"Now our entire evening is designed for enlightenment," Karidoyanes "You don't have to know a thing about anything in our program. If you want lots of detail, show up at the concert. You'll get the music delivered to you straight to the heart. Read the program notes. At the end of the concert, when you have the most burning questions to ask, we hang around to answer them."

And another anniversary will be celebrated Sept. 20. It will be Karidoyanes' 15th season with the Phil. In all that time, this symphony has never performed a piece of music twice in a concert. So, don't miss the show. It may be your one and only chance to hear the Phil play Beethoven's Ninth.

'Rent' to rock, Pascal does it all

Singer takes the stage at Boston Center for the Arts this week

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

Adam Pascal

It has been a dozen years since Adam Pascal first burst onto the Broadway scene — and earned Tony, Drama Desk and Theatre World nominations in the process — as rock musician Roger Davis in the original company of "Rent."

Since then, Pascal has originated the role of Radames in Disney's "Aida," stepped into the part of the Master of Ceremonies in the acclaimed roundabout revival of "Cabaret," and even returned to "Rent" for a few months last year along with his co-star and longtime friend Anthony Rapp. Between Broadway gigs and a stint in the London company of "Rent," Pascal has found time for television and film roles including the 2005 Chris Columbus-directed feature film version of "Rent."

While Pascal, 37, will forever be linked to the landmark Pulitzer Prize- and Tony Award-winning Jonathan Larson rock musical based on Puccini's "La Boheme" — he and Rapp are slated to top line a new national tour of the show in 2009 — the performer has always managed to carve out time for concerts like those he'll give at Boston's Wimberly Theatre this week.

Pascal's song list will, of course, include songs from "Rent," "Aida" and "Cabaret," but also music by artists like Elton John, Billy Joel, The Beatles and Pink Floyd, all of whom inspired the Bronx native to become a singer. These days, when Pascal takes to the concert stage he is often joined by Larry Edoff, his songwriting partner turned bandmate. Two years ago, the pair formed "Me and Larry." The two musicians perform original material as well as new versions of some familiar Broadway favorites. Pascal and Edoff's first CD, "Blinding Light," was released in May on Pascal's own label.

The Huntington Theatre Company will present "Adam Pascal Live," Sept. 18-20, at the Virginia Wimberly Theatre, Calderwood Pavilion, at the Boston Center for the Arts, 527 Tremont St., Boston. For tickets and information, call 617-266-0800 or go online at huntingtontheatre.org.

★★★ And the Emmy goes to... ★★★

Cohasset native Cara McKenney earns TV's top honor

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The Emmys are by their very nature a star-studded event. Among those familiar faces of television was one of Cohasset's very own stars. Cohasset native Cara McKenney was part of the team that won the Creative Arts Emmy Award for outstanding main title design. The winning piece was the title sequence for the AMC series, "Mad Men."

"The work is so good, I'm so proud of it," said McKenney. "It was really exciting to have what I think is the strongest work I've been a part of be recognized (in the industry)."

The 28-year-old McKenney, works as a producer for Imaginary Forces, a design and production company based in New York and Los Angeles, is still exuberant about the Emmy experience a week after.

"It was a really fun experience," she said.

The day of the Emmy event began "extraordinarily early," said McKenney. She wore a dress that "found her" while shopping in New York City's SoHo neighborhood. At 1p.m. she and her co-workers at Imaginary Forces were whisked away to the red carpet at the Nokia Theatre in L.A.

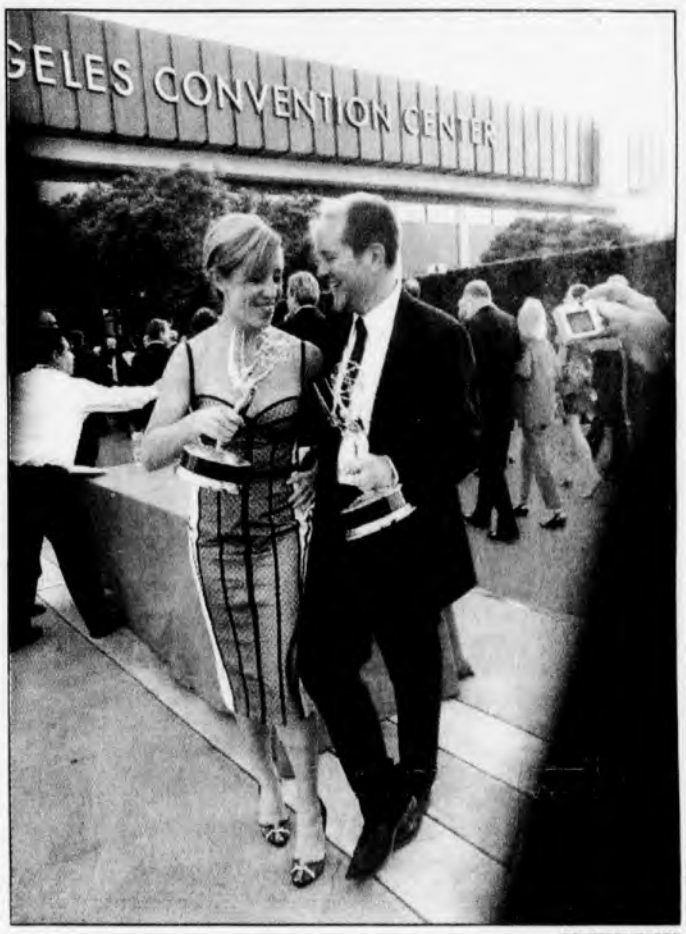
Once seated they were unaware when their category would be announced.

"You're just sitting there and all of a sudden your category is up," said McKenney, then it was her project named as the winner. Everything happened so fast from there she said it was hard to recall all the details.



The "Dog Whisperer" Cesar Millan, along with a dog that looked a lot like "Lassie," presented McKenney and her co-workers, creative directors Mark Gardner and Steve Fuller, with the Emmy Award.

McKenney spoke on behalf of the group to offer her thanks to all who made the project happen, including the team that worked on the project and "Mad Men" creator Matt Weiner whose vision they made come alive in the title sequence.

After receiving the Emmy, McKenney headed backstage for photos in front of the official Emmy backdrop. Then, they headed back to the audience to sit for another three hours of awards.

"(After we received the Emmy) it felt like a release," she said. Later in the evening, she attended the Governor's Cohasset Day a success!

First annual event gets warm welcome

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The streets of Cohasset Village were full of life this past Saturday as hundreds basked in the sunny autumn day and took in all that they love about Cohasset. At the First Annual Cohasset Day, Cohasset came out to celebrate in style.

"We got very lucky with the weather. Very, very, very, very lucky," said one of the chief organizers Alain Pinel, adding he had personally guaranteed the event would have fabulous weather, so he was extremely glad the sun came out for the day. "We couldn't have had a better day...it was gorgeous."

From the opening Cohasset Carillon concert at noon to the Classic Car Concours to the kids' mini-triathlon to the local restaurants of "Fine Food Galore," the young and old came together to have fun.

"It was better than anyone could have anticipated," said Pinel in a phone interview. As he walked around the event he saw smiles everywhere and neighbors getting to know each other. The fact they were in the village made the day even more special.

"Cohasset was in Cohasset having a marvelous time," said Pinel. "We couldn't have written a better script. It was great because of the cast of people, the people of Cohasset were the stars of the show."

Cohasset Day was an initiative of the Economic Development Committee in partnership with the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce. The event was designed to celebrate Cohasset and bring together its townspeople, while inviting those from the all over the South Shore to come see what this seaside town has to offer. It is the hope the impact of Cohasset Day will reverberate in additional shoppers to the village fueling a prosperous economic community.

"I know (the people who attended) discovered the shops and will be willing to come back," said Pinel.

Open meetings

Keeping the public's business in public

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The Open Meeting Law is the cornerstone of municipal government by ensuring public business remains public. Last Thursday (Sept. 18), members of town boards and committees as well as employees of town departments came out to learn about the Open Meeting Law.

Norfolk County Assistant District Attorney Alexei Tymoczko came to present the ins and outs of the Open Meeting Law as well as answer general questions from the audience.

"The Open Meeting Law is the basic constitution on how town business should be conducted," said Tymoczko. "Essentially, the purpose is to make sure public business is public."

Before delving into his presentation, Tymoczko advised that specific instances, concerns or possible complaints would not be addressed at the meeting.

"We prefer to handle specific open meeting law questions in writing," said Tymoczko to ensure the appropriate thought and effort is given to the issue. Three Selectmen, one School Committee member, several heads of town departments and other committee members were present at the meeting.

The Board of Selectmen asked a representative from the Norfolk County District Attorney's Office to come to

New Cohasset Mariner 'drop box'

The Cohasset Mariner has a new "drop box" and pickup location at Tedeschi's in the village. The drop box is on the counter in the front window around the corner to the left after you enter the front door.

The Mariner picks up at 8 a.m. on Mondays and Tuesdays. The drop box can be used to drop off glossy photographs, letters, flyers or other editorial copy.

The Mariner thanks Bill Ducharme at Tedeschi's for allowing Tedeschi's to be our new pickup location. For years the Mariner pickups were at Cohasset News, which is now a new dance studio. The Mariner thanks John and Larry Scott at Cohasset News for accepting Mariner items over many years. John and Larry are still at the Cohasset Butcher & Deli on Brook Street.

Library offers homework help

Program with high school set to kick off Sept. 30

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The Homework Center will be open in the library meeting room every Tuesday evening from 5:30 to 7:30 p.m. beginning Sept. 30 through June.

With the back-to-school kinks worked out, students are settling into daily homework assignments, pop quizzes, essays and research papers. It's a constant grind and students sometimes need a helping hand to sift through their assignments and to understand difficult concepts.

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library is starting a weekly Homework Center this fall to aid students with their homework. With cooperation from the Cohasset High's National Honor Society students, the program provides peer-to-peer tutoring.

"It is quite common to have kids doing their homework in the library, but this is the first time we'll have a dedicated space for them," said Library Director Jackie Rafferty. The program idea was gleaned from a library convocation early this year where libraries from across the region came together to share ideas. Students from the Stoughton Public Library spoke about how being involved in their library's Homework Center was a positive experience.

"One of the students said after he had been tutored he went from flunking to the honor roll," said Rafferty. Beyond strict academic achievement, the student explained how the tutors became role models for him.

"We decided right away we really needed to make this work in Cohasset," said Rafferty.

The Cohasset Homework Center will be available free of charge to all Cohasset students of both public and private schools. The Homework Center will be open in the library meeting room every Tuesday evening from 5:30 to 7:30 p.m. beginning Sept. 30 through June. The Friends of Library is funding the program coordinator and will also provide dinner and beverages to all participants. Local pizza shops - Papa Gino's, Cohasset Pizza, 3A Pizza & Grill, Simply Fresh (formerly Goodfellas) and Victoria's - are pitching in to help defray the cost of the weekly dinners.

Kate Nelligan, guidance counselor at the Cohasset Middle School, is serving as the program coordinator. She has been in Cohasset schools for four years, but she was previously involved in a similar program at Braintree Middle School.

"It's a winning proposition for the students and the tutors," said Nelligan. She plans to have all 30 members of the National Honor Society involved in the program and participating on a rotating schedule. Four or five students would be the tutors each week.

There will be specialty tables, so students looking for help in specific areas can get help from a tutor in all subjects. Nelligan envisions four or five tables each night, each devoted to a different subject: English, math, science, foreign language and social studies.

"I'd like to have the whole school be recommending students go to the program," said Nelligan. "It is going to be a really positive place for kids to be."

Police Beat

Two Route 3A accidents and a tractor rollover

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

• At 1:40 p.m. on Wednesday (Sept. 14), police investigated a two-car accident at the intersection of Beechwood Street and Chief Justice Cushing Highway. A 1995 GMC pickup, owned and operated by a Hanson man, was traveling west on Beechwood through the intersection when it was hit by a 2008 Toyota, driven by a Cohasset woman. The Toyota was traveling south on Route 3A and ran the red light at the intersection according to witnesses, police said. The driver of the Toyota was cited for failure to stop for a red light. Both vehicles were towed; there were no apparent injuries, police said.

• On off-duty police officer responded to an accident at 5 p.m. on Wednesday (Sept. 14) near Chief Justice Cushing Highway and Beechwood Street. Police said at 2006 Toyota driven by a Marshfield woman was headed northbound in the inside lane when a 1996 Pontiac, driven by a Cohasset woman, made a right onto Route 3A from a private driveway near the 700 block of CJC Hwy. A truck stopped to let the Pontiac enter the lane. But the Pontiac crossed over the outside lane into the center lane and into the path of the Toyota. The operator of the Pontiac was cited for failure to yield upon entering a roadway. Neither car was towed and there were no apparent injuries, police said.

• A Kubota 350 excavator, valued at $15,000, that was being operated by a Cohasset resident, tipped over Saturday at about 1 p.m. The resident, who was doing work at his residence, told police he jumped off when the tractor started to tip over and he landed on his back. He complained of pain and lightheadedness and was transported to the hospital. Driftway towing righted the tractor and towed it away, police said.

Car keyed

The owner of a 2000 Ford Windstar that had been parked at Shaw's Plaza on Monday (Sept. 15) came to the station to report that the vehicle had been "keyed" on both sides. Police are reviewing videotapes of the parking lot. The man reported the incident at 6:43 p.m.

Warrant

Police took a Cohasset man into custody last week after a computer check revealed he was wanted on a criminal warrant. A constable had asked police for assistance in serving a civil warrant. As police prepared to assist, they checked their database that revealed a default warrant for an OUI charge. A default warrant means the person charged did not appear in court as scheduled.

The man was taken to Quincy District Court, where the constable can also take the civil action, police said.

Medical issue

A woman, who was reported as driving erratically, turned out to have a medical issue; she had had recent brain surgery, police said. A caller notified police at about 10 a.m. Friday (Sept. 19) that a vehicle that was headed south on Route 3A was "all over the road" and was stopping at green lights.

Police stopped the car near the Scituate line and approached the operator who was in her 70s. Paramedics evaluated her and her sister was called, who was driven to the scene where she took custody of the car and her sister. Police filed what is called an "immediate threat" with the registry to have the woman's license suspended because they felt she should not be driving. The North Quincy woman can file an appeal with the registry, police said. She was cited for failure to stay within marked lanes.

"Officers can be put in a tough position when they see someone who should not be driving," Chief James Hussey said, explaining that it is a public safety issue.

Intoxicated

A 36-year-old Scituate woman was taken to the station in protective custody after police found her sitting on the ground in a parking lot off Route 3A. She was highly intoxicated, police said. Police received a call from a concerned citizen at about 8:30 p.m. on Friday (Sept. 19) about a woman who appeared to be drunk and was trying to get into her vehicle.

Police tried to contact the woman's family but were not immediately successful so she was taken to the station where she was held until sometime later when her mother came to pick her up.

Facing charges

A 34-year-old Scituate man with possible mental health issues is facing a host of charges including attempted murder, assault and battery on a disabled person over 60 and assault and battery on a person over 60 with a dangerous weapon following an incident at a Cohasset home last week. Police said the Scituate man's brother called to ask for a welfare check on their father who lives in Cohasset. Police said the 34-year-old was out of control and had beaten up the father. Both father and son were transported to South Shore Hospital; the father was transferred to a Boston Hospital. Because of the seriousness of the assault, police sought a warrant for the 34-year-old's arrest and took him into custody this week.

Exhausted swimmer

A 911 caller at 2:30 p.m. on Saturday (Sept. 20) reported that a person was in trouble in the water off Atlantic Avenue. The 24-year-old Scituate man was able to make it to the shore on his own where paramedics evaluated him. He had been trying to swim against the current and became exhausted, police said. The man went home with his friends but was warned not to swim in the area due to the strong current.

Vandalism

A 17-year-old Cohasset boy is facing charges of vandalizing property after he broke a window at his house. The teen had not been staying at home and was not allowed in the house unless his parents were home but tried to gain entry when his sister was home alone. Police said the boy banged on the door and broke a window.

Living in car

Police checked out a report last week about the possibility that the owner of a white pickup truck parked at the harbor was living in his car. Police ran a computer check on the plate that showed the pickup was registered and everything was in order. The vehicle owner owns a boat. The pickup, which was gone when police arrived, had been parked at the harbor for sometime.

Unruly kids

An officer talked to students on a school bus from a private school in Braintree after the driver called police. The incident occurred at 5 p.m. on Friday (Sept. 19) on Route 3A. The bus driver reported that he was having trouble with the students who were yelling, screaming and being generally unruly; he did not want the situation to escalate further. They were not being violent. The officer spoke to the students, peace was restored, and the bus was sent on its way.

Radar trailer

Police received a report about kids potentially tampering with the radar trailer, which was parked at Pond Street and Woodland Drive, when the call came in last week. When police arrived, the kids were gone. There was no problem with the trailer, but police stress the radar trailer should not be touched.

Parking problem

Police received complaints Saturday afternoon (Sept. 20) about "out of control" parking on Norfolk Road by Milliken Field during a sporting event. An officer was sent to the area where some cars were ticketed. Chief Hussey said cars blocking driveways or that are illegally parked can be tagged. He explained that most of the sports programs at Milliken Field are considerate of the neighborhood. He is not sure what went wrong this particular time.

Cross-country team to use Wheelwright

After close to a 30-year dormancy, a Cohasset High cross-country team is back. The Cohasset High runners have teamed up with runners from Hull High to field a complete team. Athletic Director Ron Ford came before the Selectmen to seek permission to use Wheelwright Park for the team's occasional practices and track meets against other area cross country teams.

"This would be a great site, if we could use it," said Ford. He hopes to build interest in the sport and the high school team over the next two years and eventually be able to field a strictly Cohasset High team. Wheelwright Park was partly chosen because there is no off-street area in Hull to have a cross-country course.

"They need the place off street," said Ford.

The Selectmen advised Ford to have a schedule placed at both the N. Main Street and Forest Avenue entrances to alert users of the park of the runners' presence. In a unanimous vote, the Selectmen gave the team permission to use the park for the season.

North Main rail crossing concerns addressed

'Jug handles' to protect cyclists

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

At long last, a solution to prevent the recurring North Main Street grade crossing bicycle accidents is being implemented. Multiple adjustments to the crossing are in the process of construction this week and next.

"That crossing has been a very long saga," said Mark Brennan, the town's Greenbush engineering liaison.

Since the summer of 2007, several serious bike accidents have occurred at the crossing. The angled train tracks cause bicycle tires to get stuck often sending the rider over the handlebars and, in some cases, causing serious injury. The MBTA will implement a specially designed pathway for bikes to facilitate a perpendicular crossing over the tracks.

In addition, the yellow sand barrels, which have temporarily blocked left turns into Woodside Cemetery for over a year, will be replaced with a more aesthetically pleasing extended island.

Brennan and Tom Gruber, the town's Greenbush engineers and MBTA liaisons have worked closely with the MBTA and their contractor Cashman, Balfour/Beatty over the course of 2008 to come up with a safe resolution to the grade crossing issues.

"The primary goal is to improve safety at the crossing," said Brennan, adding the MBTA took a lot of input from he and Gruber and included nearly all their suggestions. "In this case, they were as equally concerned as we were. We worked very collaboratively on this one for the best result."

Next to Route 3A, North Main Street is the main byway in which to enter Cohasset. With an entrance to the train station and parking lot, the residential street is expected to have increased traffic during morning and evening commuter hours.

The engineering designs at the North Main crossing call for two "jug handle"-type pathways, like the one shown above, on both sides of the street.

"The primary goal is to improve safety at the crossing."
— Mark Brennan, Greenbush liaison

The engineering designs call for two "jug handle"-type pathways on both sides of the street. The jug handle is basically a small bike path — in the shape the name implies — to allow bicycles to hit the track at a less severe angle. The grade crossing rubber matting on the tracks will extend a few feet on each side to accommodate the bike path. To complement the jug handles, additional signage and painting on the road to notify those bicyclists with their head down will be added to the crossing, said Brennan.

It is the hope these pathways will put an end to the bicycle accidents.

Additionally, the median island closer to the Hingham line will be extended to prevent left turns into Woodside Cemetery. When cars were allowed to make left turns into the cemetery, cars backed up onto the tracks creating a dangerous situation in the event a train was coming down the tracks.

The entrance to Woodside will also be narrowed to further restrict left turns from the northbound side of North Main. These changes will make permanent what funeral processions have had to do over the last year.

The dearly departed and their processions have to enter Woodside Cemetery heading southbound on North Main, re-routed to Route 3A or Cedar Street or Jerusalem Road.

Since the majority of Cohasset funerals originate from central Cohasset, they will still need to go over a grade crossing at some point during the procession (via Beechwood Street, Sohier Street, or Lower King Street) but will not necessitate turning or stopping on the tracks.

At one point, creating a second entrance to the cemetery off Route 3A was floated, but there are wetlands between the cemetery and the road making it not feasible. With the entrance changes, funeral processions will have to go out of Cohasset into Hingham, just to come back again. Visitors to Woodside will also have to abide by the "no left turn" signage as well.

Earlier this summer, the problem of cars veering off North Main and onto the tracks was corrected with a change in line painting.

The Greenbush commuter rail has been in operation will celebrate its one-year anniversary next Monday on Oct. 31. Addressing the North Main Street crossing concerns is the last major item on the Cohasset Greenbush punch list.

"The list certainly has dwindled down," said Brennan.

BRIEFLY

Sports off to great start

Athletic Director Ron Ford reported the Cohasset Skippers are off to a great fall season. A total of 215 students are a part of a fall sport this year. All the teams have complete rosters and no cuts were made. This fall, Cohasset has its first boys and girls cross country team in perhaps three decades; the cooperative team is also fielded with Hull High students. Ford said interest in the program is strong with five girls and five boys. He hopes to be able to field a strictly Cohasset team in the future.

"No cuts were made and the coaches and kids are doing a great job," said Ford.

Ford thanked the School Committee for their support of having eighth graders participate in high school sports. The ability to tap into eighth grade came in handy to field the JV boys soccer team when three high school students went out with injuries.

Wind turbine hearing postponed to Oct. 27

The continued public hearing on the proposed wind turbines originally scheduled for October 6, will be postponed to Monday, Oct. 27 at 7:15 p.m. The Oct. 27 meeting will take place in the Town Hall Auditorium.

The applicant, Jim Sweeney of CCI-Energy, has requested additional time to conduct the additional studies and gather additional data requested by the Planning Board.

As a procedural matter, the applicant has requested the postponement and the continued public hearing will reconvene on Oct. 6 only to immediately be continued to Oct. 27. No discussion on the project will take place on Oct. 6.

CCI-Energy is proposing installing two turbines on the Graham Waste site off of Route 3A behind Hingham Lumber. The project calls for two 1.65-megawatt turbines each approximately 141-meters, or 462-feet, from ground to the top of the blade.

The Planning Board will still meet on Monday, Oct. 6 to discuss other agenda items.

New school website to launch Oct. 1

The Cohasset Schools will launch an entirely new website on October 1. The re-vamped site will still be able to be accessed at www.cohassetk12.org.

"We know it has been a problem, but we want to let everyone know it is coming," said School Committee member Adrienne MacCarthy. The site will be composed of five sites, each one to be frequently updated by administrators, teachers and staff. Teachers will be able to have their own site to post homework assignments, the Superintendent will be able to post messages, and the daily school lunch menu will be available as well. The ability to purchase school lunches online will be available around the time of the new website launch.

To get a sneak peek at the new platform, visit http://cohasset.schoolfusion.us.

We'll make you smile.

Planning Board wrestles with village guidelines

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The village is never far from the Planning Board's mind. Over the past year and half, the Planning Board has dedicated hours upon hours of meeting time to the current state and future development of the town's center.

One of the last pieces of the village planning puzzle, before the real projects come forth, is the village business district design guidelines. On Monday night, the Planning Board again devoted nearly two hours to discussion during the second public hearing on the guidelines.

The design guidelines, simply stated, is a set of regulations to go with the village zoning bylaws to aid both the Planning Board and the applicants during the permitting process. It includes a set of guiding principles as well as specific areas for application assessments — everything from rooflines to materials to signage to landscaping. By setting clear expectations for development, the Planning Board aims to have a smoother review process.

With the professional consulting help from Angus Jennings of Concord Square Planning and Development, the Planning Board has a 21-page draft of the guidelines, which include text and graphic components. Minor changes had been made to the draft.

The latest draft of the village design guidelines contained new, more Cohasset-centric photos to illustrate what the Planning Board is looking for in development and re-development. The Cohasset Historical Society provided several photos and renderings, including a village zoning plan from 1960. Jennings said he made some minor, but strategic text changes in the document.

Planning Board member Mike Westcott, who has been the lead on the village zoning amendments, was not present at the meeting. However, through Jennings, he conveyed a message that the board should not feel they need to approve the guidelines that night. Jennings stressed the board should all feel comfortable with the document because they would have to defend the regulations to future applicants.

The Planning Board members that were present agreed and decided to postpone endorsing the guidelines until their next meeting on Monday, Oct. 6 to allow for thorough board member and public review.

One of Planning Board Chairman Al Moore's fears was that a development could be permitted according to all the bylaws and design guidelines, built and then a few years down the line, changes could be made to the building that would negatively impact the village visually. Satellite dishes and antennas were mentioned as possibilities.

"People need to understand once permitted it doesn't give (the applicant) carte blanche to do whatever you want," said Moore. He suggested something like, "any future additions to the approved plan that would have a visual impact to the downtown must be reviewed."

Jennings said Moore's point revealed a greater issue the board needed to address as to when the guidelines came into effect and when a change to a building triggered a need to come before the Planning Board.

According to the zoning bylaws, the design guidelines legally kick in when a project is before the board for a special permit.

"Part of the intent in putting forward the guidelines is to define what kind of design the board would like to see," said Jennings in a phone interview. "An applicant has every reason to put forth something the board likes and fits into the overall vision for the village."

'Second Main Street' sidewalk

The bulk of the night's village discussion centered on the development of a second main street on the parking lot side of South Main and the construction of a pedestrian sidewalk from Depot Court to the Red Lion.

"It has been a concept from the early days of our involvement," said Angus Jennings of Concord Square Planning and Development. A series of meetings have been held with some of the landowners and Planning Board member Clark Brewer. While there seemed to be an agreement among all that the sidewalk was a good idea, there is a sense of urgency in getting something accomplished.

"If something doesn't get done in the near term, the opportunity could be lost," said Jennings. With the Depot Court building near completion and a building proposed behind the gas station, things are happening in the area. Unless a cohesive plan is developed, the town and the building owners could miss out on the opportunity to develop a contiguous sidewalk.

"We want there to be an active, vibrant, economic community on that side. A sidewalk could contribute to the economic vitality in ways that should not be ignored," said Brewer.

Jennings outlined a three-step process that would need to be accomplished in the near term. First, the board would have to determine the best location for the sidewalk and have it on paper. Second, the sidewalk would have be designed and engineered. And third, it would have to be decided who would pay for the construction and legal matters like land swaps and easements would have to be dealt with.

Medical building for 'new face' of village

'Second Main St.' hoped for town parking lot

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

In the coming months, the village could have a new building added to its "skyline." A medical building to be constructed behind the village gas station is before the Planning Board for consideration.

Dr. Roger Pompeo, who currently runs his practice in an office building on Route 3A (760 Chief Justice Cushing Highway), is proposing plans to construct a one-story building to relocate his practice to the village. Monday night was the first of what is expected to be two nights of public hearings on the project.

Not only will the proposed 2,000 square foot building occupy what is currently a vacant paved lot in the village, but also it will be the first step to creating the "second main street" along the town parking lot, one of the key goals of the amended village zoning bylaws. The proposed project is the first development to come under the amended village business district bylaws.

Architect Don Ritz, A.I.A. of Hull has designed a striking building with a classical pediment front building, with a colonnade porch, classical columns and a tower featuring a smaller pediment to mirror the main buildings lines. The 50-by-40 foot foundation will be have a six-foot wide porch on two sides of the building.

"We are trying to keep it simple, but elegant," said Ritz describing the closest architectural style as "Greek revival." The building itself, he said, has a traditional New England appearance.

The most distinct architectural feature is the tower, which allows for a double height entryway.

The tower will allow natural light to flow into the waiting area space, "we want to have it be a super dramatic space," said Ritz. There will be a mezzanine balcony type overlook down from the tower to the waiting area.

ARCHITECT'S RENDERING BY DON RITZ, A.I.A

An architect's rendering of the proposed new medical building behind the gas station in the village. This is the view facing the town parking lot. The address would be Parking Way, however, it has been suggested the name of Parking Way be changed.

Inside, the building will have a reception area, a nurse's room, Dr. Pompeo's office and two exam rooms. On the upper level, inside the tower space will be a small storage area. There will be a "crawl space" basement for mechanical purposes.

Pompeo has had his practice in Cohasset since 1970. He said he is currently leasing his space on Route 3A and would like to invest in his own space.

"Many of my patients are getting older…and I envision having as few steps as possible" to get into the doctor's office. In that same spirit, the office will be entirely handicap accessible.

Although the project is not required to have parking spaces per the zoning bylaws, six spaces have been incorporated into the plan. Both Dr. Pompeo's patients and the general public will be able to utilize the spaces.

"It's a win-win for the parking lot," said John Cavanaro of Cavanaro Consulting of Norwell, the consulting engineering firm for the project.

Planning Board member Clark Brewer, who is also an architect, made a few suggestions for ways to optimize green space while still giving the same number of parking spaces.

Cavanaro is still working out which plants will be a part of the ultimate landscape, but stressed Pompeo's commitment to having a substantial landscaping plan with irrigation.

"The project is a substantial improvement over what is there today," said Cavanaro.

Of note, the Sewer Commission has approved a town sewer connection for the proposed building.

The building's address was discussed briefly. The lot was a part of James Lane before the Greenbush train revival and the application said 1 James Lane, but the Assessor's office has rejected that address and assigned 20 Parking Way.

From the audience, Wayne Sawchuk, property owner of 35-39 South Main, suggested the Planning Board look into changing the name of "Parking Way" to something more "classy" to complement the board's vision of a second main street along the parking lot.

"Parking Way is not an appropriate name for something we want it to be," said Sawchuk, throwing 'West Main Street' out as an option. Fire Captain Mark Trask said the address needed to be clear and concise to ensure emergency vehicles could respond promptly.

"I don't want anybody to have any problem finding the building," said Trask.

All in all, the Planning Board responded favorably to the project.

"I love your building," said Vice Chairman Stuart Ivimey.

"It is a really good looking building," said Brewer.

Some details like the specific building materials and colors were yet to be determined. The Planning Board asked the applicant to return with those specifics at the continued public hearing on Monday, October 6. In the meantime, the applicant is scheduled to meet with the newly re-constituted Design Review Board this coming Tuesday, Sept. 30.

From the Archives of the Cohasset Historical Society

October 6, 1970

Mrs. R. B. Waterman
141 Union Street
Athol, Massachusetts

Dear Mrs. Waterman:

I appreciated my conversation with you a week or so ago but have been delayed in getting to your historical museum. What I have been interested is the old fog bell that went to the bottom of the sea with the first Minot's Light in 1851.

Probably about 1858 it was recovered and sometime thereabouts Mr. Dwight Faulkner bought it and put it in the tower of the old mill in Turner, Maine. Here it stayed for fifty years when his son, Francis Faulkner, was burned to death trapped in the tower ringing the bell to announce the fire. The molten bell was recovered, recast and placed in the Baptist Church in Bryant Pond, Maine, where it still resides.

Two weeks after his daughter and, I believe, his nephew, J. Osborne Faulkner, had it put in the tower, J. Osborne was drowned in a canoeing accident in the nearby river. These are a few of the missing links I am trying to pick up, possibly through some notations by these various Faulkner family members.

I will let you know when I can come out but thought it perhaps would interest you to know that the nature of my mission was less the genealogy of the Faulkner family than it is to pick up the missing links in the old Minot's Light fog bell story.

Sincerely yours,

Theodore L. Badger, M.D.

This is a copy of a letter Dr. Theodore L. Badger, resident of Cohasset, had sent to the then current President of the state Historical Society in 1970. Dr Badger was a descendant of Erastus B. (Beethoven) Badger, of the E.B. Badger & Sons Brass Works. Erastus Badger was one of the engineers for the original Minots Light. Dr. Badger spent several years trying to solve the mystery of the Fog Bell, so necessary to the sailors in those times. Now we count on the Coast Guard, and Coast Guard Auxiliary to serve and protect us on these waters.

The Historical Society's "At the Edge of the Sea" Benefit/Art Show, Oct. 3, honors these seamen and asks you to join us for this evening presentation. Call 781-383-1434 for more information.

The Cohasset Historical Society is grateful to those who remember us with donations of Cohasset photographs, textiles and memorabilia. We would like to take this occasion to thank you for your continued generous support.

Cohasset Native Cara McKenney earns TV's top honor

Ball. "Overall it was a fun and exhilarating experience."

McKenney grew up in Cohasset, attended Milton Academy then Middlebury College majoring in film before heading to New York City to get into movie production. Her proud parents Monica and Brian McKenney of Spring Street can't wait for her to come home and show off the Emmy.

It was a long road to the Emmy ceremony. The winning project, which took about four months to complete, had its own set of challenges. "Mad Men" was AMC's, (the American Movie Classics cable television station) first foray into original programming.

"It was a large gamble," said McKenney explaining the television executives had to get their viewers used to the idea of watching a television drama series on their channel rather than strictly old westerns.

Lionsgate and AMC approached Imaginary Forces to pitch a title sequence for their new show. They pitched and landed the contract — series creator Matt Weiner said the Imaginary Forces pitch was exactly what he envisioned. Matt Weiner earned fame as an executive producer and writer for HBO's The Sopranos.

The creative team approached the title sequence more in the way they approach a live action film sequence, rather than an animated piece.

The television show "Mad Men" is set in a fictional 1960s ad agency and centers on the dichotomy of its main characters, all of whom play key roles at the agency. The men balance a work life characterized by the free-wheeling social mores of the times, while at home they play the roles of dedicated husbands and fathers.

The opening sequence was designed to capture ongoing internal struggle of the main character Don Draper played by Jon Hamm.

The sequence is executed in a 2-D style that suggests cut-out animation. A man wearing a traditional business suit enters an office and sets his briefcase down. The man — whom viewers can assume Draper — is largely seen in silhouette wearing a dark suit and tie with a white shirt.

Suddenly, the office falls away — pictures drop off the walls, the windows and blinds fall off into space, the floor drops, and the character is suddenly in free fall, hurtling down the skyscraper in slow motion.

The cityscape through which the man falls is a mix of abstract and photo realistic depictions of a stylized metropolis. There are giant ad images, many of them real vintage ads, which are a mix of sexy and familiar, images of leggy models juxtaposed with smiling wholesome families, representing the conflicting worlds in which Draper lives.

At the close of the 30-second sequence the man is seen from behind, sitting in a lounge chair and striking an insouciant pose, arm extended casually, unlit cigarette between his fingers as the program title crawls up the screen. That final frame has become an icon for the series and is used in much of the marketing and promotion for the show. The title sequence is set to the RJD2 song, "A Beautiful Mine," chosen by Weiner.

It was McKenney's role job as producer was to oversee the project from the initial pitch to the final product. She managed the production — animators, budget, design — and maintained constant communication with the client.

"I had to make sure we were all working on the same thing and toward the same vision," said McKenney.

The other nominees in the category were the title sequences of HBO's "Bernard And Doris," Fox's "New Amsterdam," TNT's "The Company" and NBC's "Chuck" (also designed and produced by Imaginary Forces).

Right now, McKenney is working on a title sequence for Pink Panther 2 and Terminator 4.

"Title sequences is an interesting way you can be a part of a television show or film. In a way, it sets a mood and tone…and when successfully done for a show it can be intricately linked with the program."

Recreation Department to offer Sunday Jams

Recreation Department director Ted Carroll has tapped music industry veteran and Cohasset resident Howie Altholtz to help coordinate Sunday Jams, a program of music for teens. Altholtz has been involved in the music business for more than 25 years, as a writer, performing artist, producer and lawyer.

Carroll and Altholtz envision starting with Sunday Jams at the Recreation Center. Depending on interest, additional services may include advice on the business of music, songwriting clinics and guest music business insiders, including artists, producers and managers.

For information, email Carroll at tcarroll@townofcohasset.org or call 781.383.4109. A schedule is in the works, and any input and ideas would be welcome.

All Wednesday evening programs will begin at 7:30 in the Society's Headquarters at 106 S. Main St. There is no cost for these programs and light refreshment will be served.

Other events planned for the fall include a program on the "History of Town Hall" on Sunday, Sept. 21 from 2 to 4 p.m.. Speakers for this program that details the past as well as the future of Town Hall will include David Wadsworth, David Farrag and Jim Sandell.

The Society will hold its Annual Meeting and Fall Dinner on Sunday, Oct. 26, at the Cohasset Harbor Resort from 5:30 to 9 p.m. with speaker, John Horrigan talking about "Bay State Phantoms". In December, the Annual Wassail Party will be held on Dec. 7 from 2 to 4 p.m. at the Pratt Building.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Open Meeting Law

We applaud the town for holding an informational session on the Open Meeting Law last week.

We only wish that more board members attended, especially those individuals who sit on committees that do not get the same coverage and scrutiny as the Selectmen and School Committee do, for example.

Selectmen asked a representative from the Norfolk County District Attorney's Office to come to speak to town committee members and town officials on the Open Meeting Law following a citizen complaint last spring. The complaint was over a planned "sub-committee" meeting of the Board of Selectmen (a meeting that never happened).

The Open Meeting Law — which requires public business be conducted in public — is one of the few tools we journalists and you, the public, have to force town boards to be forthcoming and open at all times with a few limited exceptions. There are narrowly defined exemptions to the Open Meeting Law that deal with strategy related to litigation matters, some private personnel issues and collective bargaining.

Norfolk County Assistant District Attorney Alexei Tymoczko urged officials to proceed with caution when establishing subcommittees, which cannot be formed to circumvent the law.

He also pointed out that the mere absence of a quorum does not mean that the public's business can be discussed free of the Open Meeting Law. He said a simple exchange of views on a public matter by members of a board constitutes a meeting.

Tymoczko warned officials to be careful with e-mail and phone conversations, even if the original purpose is for scheduling.

"A discussion on scheduling can quickly go from the schedule to the subject to be discussed to throwing out opinions on those subjects," said Tymoczko.

While social engagements or "chance meetings" are not subject to the Open Meeting Law, Tymoczko said board members should stay away from any discussion of political or town business related issues. If town officials are discussing public business then the public should be given the opportunity to be involved.

With only two exceptions — the reputation, character, physical condition or mental health of an employee or discipline of an employee (the individual in question can opt to have the discussion in open session) — boards never have to convene an executive session.

Minutes of an executive session can be withheld until the reason for the executive session is no longer valid. But without knowing the substance of executive sessions, it's tough for us to tell when the minutes should be made public. It would be nice to see those minutes, which are no longer restricted, released without having to ask for them.

Here at the Mariner, we believe that town officials should always err on the side of open government. Executive sessions should be used sparingly; copies of correspondence (including emails) and other documents and materials should always be readily available.

There is nothing — absolutely nothing — that tears at the hearts of reporters more than closed government. We can't do our jobs if the hatches are battened down and not only that, you won't find out what's going on.

Cohasset Day

The Economic Development Committee, in particular Alain Pinel, Chairman Peter Brown and Darilynn Evans, should be congratulated on the first-ever and first-annual Cohasset Day held Saturday. There was an army of volunteers and merchants who also pitched in on so many levels.

What a fun day for everyone. We looked at faces and interpreted much of the happy looks and smiles we saw as an expression of love for this town.

That was really the purpose of the event: a way to enjoy being part of Cohasset while also encouraging others (who live out of town) to pay us a visit.

It is amazing what can happen with an idea and the energy, enthusiasm and determination to carry it out.

We think Cohasset Day captured the unique spirit of this community.

What a wonderful place to call home. We are so grateful that many residents have taken leadership roles in creating a vision that can keep Cohasset moving while maintaining its true charm and character. A lot of towns have missed this opportunity. Thankfully, Cohasset has not.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Higher fee structure for dog licenses

TO THE EDITOR:

Chief Hussey recently responded to citizen's expression of concern that the Town of Cohasset does not respond to calls for the Animal Control Officer to pick-up dogs that are wandering the streets apparently lost. Chief Hussey responded that it is best to let the dog wander and in all likelihood it will return home or be found by the owner(s). Chief Hussey's response not only violates town bylaws that dogs should be on a leash or under the supervision and/or voice control of the owner, but it is also a lose-lose answer. A. Cohasset ends up with dogs with undetermined dispositions wandering loose and, B. the dog may not find its way home and may be attacked by a predator, hit by a vehicle or die a slow death of starvation.

Three years ago, I suggested that the current annual dog registration fees of $8(fixed)/$15(not-fixed) be increased to $15/$25, respectively. The current fee structure has been in-place at least 11 years (as far as memory takes us) and perhaps much longer. The Animal Control Officer is underpaid and cannot fulfill his responsibilities. The increased fee structure would more than pay for the Animal Control Officer to turn in stray dogs to the Scituate Animal Shelter and cover boarding fees charged back to Cohasset (when an owner retrieves his dog; the Shelter asks the owner to pay all applicable fees and Cohasset is off the hook).

Those of us who own dogs are animal lovers. I am confident that the higher fee structure would be accepted gracefully by dog owners if the reason for the fee increase were explained to them in a mailer (about 700 dogs are licensed in Cohasset). This solution does not impose a cost on those who do not own pets.

We have two dogs so I don't think I am being hypocritical.

TO THE EDITOR:

I have been very upset not once, but two times in the last two weeks with the actions of our Transit Police detail at the bottom of King Street and Route 3A. My Mom is 78 years old and still a good driver and totally on the ball for the most part. She was going from my home to a doctor visit and came out of lower King Street only to be stopped, or so she thought since the police officer had both his hands out to the sides. She stopped and he proceeded to shout at her repeatedly at "why aren't you coming out, come out, don't you know what this means," etc. He had her nearly in tears – the average person does not know what a police person is gesturing unless they are waving a clear hand up to stop, or waving to go, or side to side. Both hands up to the sides would make me think to stop as well. I know he was not "one of our own" policemen, as my husband is one of our own officers and would not put up with an officer treating the public in such a way.

Secondly, my uncle ran into the same (large older man) Transit Officer this week while attempting to turn into the same office. He proceeded to yell as well, this time using the "f" word at him and his wife repeatedly – and really putting him down.

There is no need. This man chose a job of serving the public – not ridiculing and harassing the elderly population. Maybe the MBTA should observe this particular officer – he does not deserve our tax money paying his salary.

I might note another day a nice officer that is on our own force stopped traffic to let us out and I stopped to thank him. It seems people are either getting screamed at or the Transit Officer has his back to traffic and is not even doing his job.

I am not a writer, but hope that I have conveyed my opinion of this particular officer to you. He should not be in a public service position if he cannot do his job in a courteous way.

Silk Mist will be missed

TO THE EDITOR:

I would like to thank everyone, especially the children that befriended my dear horse, Silk Mist.

She lived for 43 years, 30 of those were on South Main Street at Saltmarsh Farm.

I believe she brought great joy to one and all.

Correcting a dangerous situation

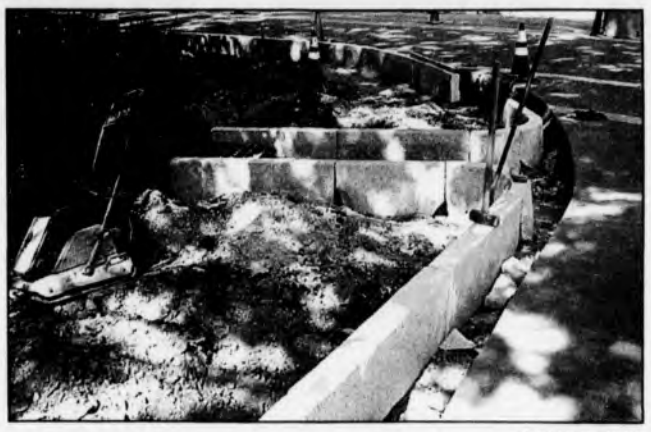
MAKING TRACKS

TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN

Greenbush-North Main Street Crossing – Work continues on the reconstruction of the North Main Street crossing. The accompanying photo shows the granite curbing being set at the entrance to Woodside Cemetery. To recap, the work being done will 1) extend the traffic island on the Hingham end of the crossing, 2) narrow the entrance to Woodside cemetery, and 3) add special bike "jug handle" paths so that bicycles will be able to cross the tracks at a less dangerous angle.

Items 1) and 2) in the above list are designed to absolutely prohibit left turns into the cemetery. If you remember, over a year ago, when the MBTA was in the process of having the State and Federal authorities approve this crossing, they witnessed a funeral cortege that came to a rest across the tracks. This obviously is a very dangerous situation. The only way the authorities would permit the MBTA to use this crossing was to reconstruct it in such a way that left turns into the cemetery are not only prohibited, but impossible to make.

The Town Parking Lot saga – This past week saw another milestone event. CBB finally completed all of the paving in the Town Parking Lot. This past Tuesday, the lot was closed for the day for striping. When striping is finished there will finally be a bit of organization in the lot. We have asked the DPW to erect one way signs at the Depot Court driveways so that the "in" and "out" driveways can be re-established.



But, this past Tuesday was absolutely chaotic. On Monday, we notified all of the business in the Village that the lot would be closed on Tuesday for striping. We made alternate plans for Village merchant and employee parking. The striper was to start at 7 a.m. that morning. By 9 a.m., no striper. By 1 p.m., no striper. We were in nearly constant contact with the CBB superintendent, and he couldn't get any more information. Finally, the striper arrived at 3:45 p.m. They had been unavoidably delayed on another job. We huddled together with a CBB supervisor and directed them to at least stripe the parking row against the businesses on Parking Way. (Parking Way is the name of the road that runs through the Town Parking Lot.)

So what's the upshot? We will need to close the lot once again, much to the consternation of the Village businesses. However, the bright side is that this time there will be access to the businesses on Parking Way, especially the medical and service businesses, while the balance of the lot will be closed. We don't have an exact date for the additional work as we go to press. Once we have that information we will contact the businesses in the Village.

Street pollution remediation – The Conservation Commission project currently installing bio-retention facilities to clean up storm water are receiving their plantings this week. We are not sure that planting will be completed this week, but it will be close. If you have a chance, drive by and take a look. Two areas on Cushing Road are designed so that the storm water is dumped into a settling area so that the particles in the water (sand, etc.) can settle out. Then, the water is directed to an area full of plants that will absorb some of the "nasties." Ultimately, the water is released to the adjacent wetlands. In the event of a giant "gulley washer" the water flows directly to the wetlands from the settling area. But, keep in mind, before the "gully washer" there is usually a lighter rain. It is this early rain that really cleans most of the "nasties" from the street. By the time the "gully washer" happens, the street water will be appreciably cleaner. Thus, the rain garden will have done its job.

Other bio-retention locations are on Norfolk Road at Cushing, Pond at Spring Street and on South Main Street at St. Anthony's. Stop by these other sites and see if you can figure out how they work.

Little Harbor Project – Farmer's Market – The Little Harbor project continues down Main Street toward the Common installing new water lines. Since the contractor has a good chance of being near or at the Common this week, the Farmer's Market had to think about relocating. The Music Circus made a very generous offer to host the market for the balance of the year. This past Thursday will have been the first time at their new location. There will be ample parking, very adequate space for the vendors and electrical service for the sound system. We hope you continue to enjoy all of the benefits of the Farmer's market at the Music Circus for the balance of their year.

The Town Parking Lot earns part of its stripes!

Paving – One quick note on paving… We mentioned last week that we expected to be paving Church, Doane, Beechwood and South Main streets in the areas that have been cold planed. Due to equipment issues and the expected rain late this week this paving has been postponed until Monday, Sept. 29th. We expect the paving to take two or three days with the road striping to follow within a week or two.

My friend Ruby

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Her name was Ruby Weil and, when I knew her, she wrote captions and assigned photographers for Wide World Photos, which shared office space with us in our shop on the fifth floor at 50 Rock.

She was a quiet, soft-spoken woman, not really shy but not really effusive, either. We were not close friends. Nor were we casual acquaintances. I'd put us somewhere around a four on a scale of ten.

Every now and then we'd have lunch together at the Redhead's, a restaurant in the bowels of Rockefeller Center that we writers would repair to when the press agents and their expense accounts weren't around.

Once, when I was confronted with a $400 hospital bill that fell through a gap in our health insurance plan, it was Ruby who came up with a loan to see me through. I paid it back, of course, mostly by downsizing the three-martini lunch to a two.

She was, as the phrase prominent at the time had it, "a nice lady."

But through it all, I got a sense that there was something hidden in Ruby's past that didn't fit her present mould. Her oldest friends at the office never spoke of it and I, being a gentleman, never asked.

Lately, like so many of us old folks who are referred to gently as senior citizens, I have become addicted to the Internet, particularly a little box in the upper right corner that says "Google."

I think I may have googled everyone I ever knew going back to the first grade at the Central School in Hubbardston. I found some of them, too, and one of them was Ruby Weil.

The first reference to Ruby identified her as a writer and a Socialist. The second cited her contribution of an article titled "Job Insurance — At Last," for the Jan. 15, 1938, issue of the publication People's Press.

The third reference, in book called "Verona Secrets," told me what I sought — my friend Ruby was revealed as the woman who introduced Sylvia Ageloff to Jacques Mornard.

Unless you're a history buff or an octogenarian, you're probably scratching your head over that one, but it was the first act in a play that ended all internal opposition to Joe Stalin as the dictator of Russia.

Sylvia Ageloff was a confidante of Leon Trotsky, Stalin's avowed enemy living in a closely guarded exile in Mexico City. Mornard was actually Ramon Mercador, a Spanish communist sent by Stalin to kill him.

Ageloff and Mercador became lovers and, as time went on, the assassin came to move freely in and out of Trotsky's hideout until, on Aug. 20, 1940, he buried a hand ax in the old Bolshevik's head.

Did Ruby know what she was doing when she introduced Ageloff to Mornard? Another googled reference, "The Secret World of American Communism," says she did. Me? I'd rather not believe it.

Ruby Weil was in her 50s when I knew her, and that was more than 40 years ago now, so I assume she has passed on to her reward.

I hope it was a good one.

Going positive

DRIVING WHILE TYPING

JOHN LENGYEL

I know that in the past much of my column space has been devoted to complaining about this or that trivial thing, but I'm really a very positive person by nature, and to prove it I'm not going to complain about anything this week. The weather has been beautifully clear and dry, my kids are safely back in the custody of the State for six hours every weekday, and there's a good chance my mortgage company will go bankrupt, which I'm pretty sure would wipe the slate clean and allow me to afford a tummy tuck. Things are looking up, and there's no justification for the usual whining that passes for observational humor around here.

One thing I am wondering, though, and it's just a question, is why the roads in Cohasset are treated like the National Rototiller Testing Grounds. This is not meant as a complaint. I'm just curious whether there will ever come a day when my children or perhaps my children's children can bicycle from one end of this 7000-person village to the other without losing a filling. I know I should be glad I live in a town that can afford major infrastructure improvements, and I am. I'm very proud. Of all the towns I've seen with mile upon mile of exposed temporary water mains, Cohasset's are definitely the most colorful and easiest to tap for illicit lawn-irrigation purposes. I'm just asking when all these terrific improvements for which I'm truly thankful might stop helping so much, that's all. No biggie.

The only other issue bugging me slightly this week — and again I hate to use the word "bugging" — is bugs. Here's the thing: they know we don't like them, that's obvious, and yet they never do anything to try to win us over. Doesn't that strike you as elitist? When was the last time you had an encounter with a bug that you would describe as friendly? I've got a daughter so entophobic that a tiny ball of lint will send her tearing through the house screaming about a spider, and I want to reassure her, but seriously what can I say? "Most spiders are actually beneficial, because they eat the other bugs that can inject you with venom or destroy our house or step on dog poop and then fly over and get stuck in your oatmeal."

Do bugs really expect this argument to be effective with children? "Oh yeah, honey, the more bugs you have crawling all over your room, the better!" Gimme a break. You know what? They could just stop with the blood sucking. That would be good PR. But I feel like I'm starting to complain a little here so I'll switch to a less contentious topic: politics.

The main reason I decided not to be negative about anything this week is that the two presidential campaigns are ramping up their negative campaign ads, which always tick me off to no end. We've got Obama accusing McCain of changing his tune on government regulation of banks, so McCain has to accuse Obama of wanting to teach science to kindergarteners. Then Obama fires off an ad suggesting that because McCain's campaign staff consists of 18 lobbyists and one large brown moth, his pledge to rid Washington of the influence of lobbyists and moths is called into question, and of course McCain has to respond by saying Obama smells like a camel. It's just back and forth all week long, and these obvious attempts to manipulate voters' emotions don't even work. Why can't Obama explain some of the positive aspects of smelling like a camel, for instance, while McCain touts his war record? Those are things we'd all like to hear more about.

It feels good to write about the world's many upsides rather than being cynical and sarcastic all the time. The Patriots are doomed this season, which will spare us another crushing last-minute Super Bowl loss. Financial markets may be in a tailspin but that should hardly affect a farming and fishing community like Cohasset. And on January 20th, unless the Supreme Court intervenes again we will have a president who can accurately pronounce "nuclear" and many other common English words. The vice president may be a different story, but in that case at least she'll be a decent shot.

John Lengyel lives in Cohasset, which has the highest number of orange cones per capita than any town in the U.S. besides Coneville, Alaska.

Assistant DA speaks to town officials on Open Meeting Law speak to town committee members and town officials on the Open Meeting Law following a citizen complaint last spring. The complaint was over a planned "sub-committee" meeting of the Board of Selectmen (a meeting that never happened).

Fittingly so, sub-committees was among the first issues addressed by Tymoczko. He told the audience to "proceed with a lot of caution" with sub-committees because in most cases sub-committee meetings are subject to the same rules as full board meetings.

"Sub-committees can't be delegated in order to circumvent the Open Meeting Law," said Tymoczko.

Often times Tymoczko said committees misunderstand the meaning of quorum and believe if a quorum is not present they are not subject to the regulations of the Open Meeting Law.

Tymoczko said a simple exchange of views on a public matter by members of a board constitutes a meeting. The mere absence of a quorum does not mean that public business may be discussed free of the requirements of the Open Meeting Law.

Tymoczko also told the audience to be careful with e-mail and phone conversations, even if the original purpose is for scheduling.

"A discussion on scheduling can quickly go from the schedule to the subject to be discussed to throwing out opinions on those subjects," said Tymoczko.

While social engagements or chance meetings are not subject to the Open Meeting Law, Tymoczko encouraged town board members to stay away from any discussion of political or town business related issues. If town officials are discussing public business then the public should be given the opportunity to be involved.

"A meeting is convening and deliberating," said Tymoczko. That means even sub-committee meetings need to be posted.

"My experience is deliberation takes a long time and then there is a defining moment. We want to have those defining moments in an open meeting."

Tymoczko said the District Attorney's office carefully looks at these complaints to determine if the board members were looking to evade the Open Meeting Law.

"If town officials are trying to work around the Open Meeting Law, my only caution is you will violate it," said Tymoczko. "Try not to talk politics outside a public meeting."

Next up for discussion was executive session is probably where the most controversy occurs. Before delving into the very specific reasons boards can go into a closed-to-the-public meeting, Tymoczko advised just because a board can go into executive session doesn't mean they have to.

"Executive session is not something a municipal body ever has to go into," said Tymoczko with two exceptions being the reputation, character, physical condition or mental health of an employee or discipline of an employee (the individual in question can opt to have the discussion in open session).

Reasons for executive session must be enumerated and voted on in a roll call vote. The minutes from executive session cannot be kept secret indefinitely. Records of executive session may remain secret as long as publication of the minutes may defeat the purposes of the executive session, but no longer. In other words, as soon as the reason for executive session is over (an employee's contract is renewed, litigation resolved, etc.), the minutes should become available to the public.

When in doubt, Tymoczko advised to "always err on the side of being more public."

Tymoczko spent about 20 minutes fielding questions from the audience.

Town Clerk Marion Douglas asked if it was illegal to have public meetings on Sundays or holidays — and the answer was yes. He said even emergency meetings on Sunday should be given a second thought.

Planning Board administrator Jo-Ann Pilczak asked if e-mails sent by one member of a board to the other members of the board, not for comment or reply but just to keep them up to date on an issue or project, would be a violation.

Tymoczko cautioned against the practice, "I don't know many town officials who don't have an opinion to throw in there…the public is entitled to know the opinions and ideas of their elected officials."

Selectman Karen Quigley asked if three Selectmen happen to attend a Planning Board meeting for informational purposes, did that constitute a violation?

The answer was as long as the Selectmen were watching the meeting and not discussing issues in the audience or solicited for an opinion, they were in the clear.

"You can quickly bleed into the area of a dual meeting" between two boards, said Tymoczko.

The Norfolk County District Attorney William Keating's Office enforces all aspects of the Open Meeting Law.

To view a full handbook on the Open Meeting Law, visit http://www.mass.gov/da/norfolk/ and click on publications, then "open meeting handbook."

Key points of the Open Meeting Law

- A simple exchange of views on a public matter by member of a board constitutes a meeting.
- Sub-committees appointed by a governmental body are subject to the Open Meeting Law.
- Administrative matters such as scheduling the date, time, and place of a meeting, or soliciting agenda items do not need to be conducted at an open meeting.
- Discussions at meetings must be audible to everyone in attendance.
- Discussions at meetings must be intelligible to all presents. If discussions can be understood only by reference to written materials, the written materials must be made available to the public.
- The Open Meeting Law provides no general right for a member of the public to address a governmental body.
- A board that uses its formal meetings merely to ratify decisions made in private is in violation of the Open Meeting Law.
- Except in an emergency, a notice 48 hours in advance of every meeting of any governmental body shall be filed with the Town Clerk. Notice includes Saturdays, but not Sundays and legal holidays. The meeting must be posted on the official bulletin board in Town Hall.
- Minutes are public records and the person having custody of the minutes must permit them to be inspected and examined by any person, under the supervision of the custodian.

HEALTH NOTES

Health Fair – a review and what's next…

Last week, the Health Fair, sponsored by the Board of Health was our best to date. Over a hundred visitors came to the Second Congregational Church, Bates Hall, and received advice, assistance and not a little booty. Over 40 bicycle helmets were fitted and given away free, as were pillboxes and other health aids. Snacks were available as well as diagnostic screenings by dedicated health, fitness, personal care professionals and advisers who provided free of charge advice, assistance and counseling for the citizens of Cohasset.

The Board of Health is now contemplating a number of new initiatives.

With support by donations from Pilgrim Bank, Cohasset Rotary Club, Goodwin Graphics and others, clinicians provided a long listing of services including measurements of Blood Pressure, Cholesterol, Osteoporosis, Medication Screening, PSA Testing for those with prostate worries; Oral Cancer Screening, Vision - Cataract and Glaucoma Screening. The Melanoma Education Foundation provided skin analysis to detect melanoma, a growing problem in our sun bathing and tanning population.

Of special interest was the Brain Fitness Demonstration in which people could try out the new brain fitness program games, complements of the Paul Pratt Library and the Board of Health. Soon the Paul Pratt Library will have computers available with the latest easy to use brain fitness exercise software that can be used to improve memory, visual comprehension and hearing.

Numerous Emergency Preparedness kits were given away free. Others are available at the Board of health with full instructions on how to prepare your family for an emergency.

What's next? Well, the BoH is now contemplating a number of new initiatives. Of course, the "Whole Health and Fitness" concept will be broadened. We are working with the Recreation Department in their new expanded program. The Rec Department has begun publishing a Town mailing, listing its activities. This document is mailed out to every household in Town three times a year; January, April and September. It lists the recreation activities available in Cohasset, such as dog training classes, babysitting classes, yoga and Summer Playground activities, a new Summer Xtreme program for teens, a Summer Band Program, Summer Drama Workshop, Youth Tennis Lessons, a Summer Band Concert Series, Fitness programs, Kitchen Kids Workshops, Technology Class, Intro to Fencing Clinic, Rock Climbing in Quincy, etc. All of these programs can also be looked into at their new website

The Recreation Commission meets once a month. All meetings are open to the public and are held in the Recreation Commission office on the first floor of Cohasset Town Hall, 41 Highland Ave.

The purpose of the Board's new outlook is the burgeoning recognition by doctors and medical researchers that a diversity of activities is as important to general health as diet, physical and mental training and of course, disease control, i.e. a healthy environment.

Perhaps the Nation's turmoil is a time to examine our present overcharged lives and select a different lifestyle; one in which we set ourselves more modest goals and less pretentious ambitions. We're surely in for a slowdown of our breakneck pace; maybe we should examine how fast we should be traveling to get into a very uncertain future.

For more information on any of the aforementioned topics, call Mary Goodwin, RN, 781-383-2210; Tara Tradd 383-4116; or Ted Carroll, Recreation Director, 781 383-4109.

Steve Bobo is a long-time member of the Cohasset Board of Health.

Green buildings open in Cohasset

Have you been wondering what you can do to save money on your utility bills?

Some buildings in Cohasset have implemented heat and electricity cost saving methods and are willing to share their knowledge. On Saturday, October 4 (most open from 10a.m. to 4p.m.) four buildings in Cohasset for visitors as part of the annual Northeast Sustainable Energy Association open house tour.

The Cohasset locations are among 30 South Shore homes, schools and businesses that are a part of the open house tour. Visit www.nesea.org and type in your zip code or the kind of improvement you would like to learn about to find the sites.

In Cohasset, visitors can compare the new Sun Pipes at the Deer Hill School (10 a.m. to noon) with the new Velux Sun Tunnels at the Center for Student Coastal Research, 40 Parker Ave. Student will be on hand at the CSCR and Alternative Energy Committee member Sally Ayers will be at Deer Hill to answer visitors questions.

Those interested in solar hot water systems can speak to Mike Bliss at 76 Summer Street and Henry Rattenbury at 7 Briarwood Lane off Bancroft Way, which is off Pond Street. The systems have been saving owners money for a number of years.

Beyond Cohasset, you can discover both new and old buildings that are energy efficient. For example, there is geothermal heating systems at the Stellwagen Bank National Marine Sanctuary Headquarters in the converted Scituate Coast Guard building and at a new house under construction in Middleborough. You can find out how to build your own low-cost solar air heater at a century-old house in North Weymouth. While in Hull, you can compare three different brands of new solar hot air panels that are being installed as a demonstration at the Weir River Estuary Center.

At the New England Wildlife Center in Weymouth you can see how much electricity comes from its photovoltaic shingles. At the Charlie Horse Restaurant in Kingston, you will find a new 54-panel photovoltaic array valued at $78,000 that cost $11,000 after a Massachusetts Technology Collaborative rebate, federal tax credits and deductions, and sales tax credits. The array will pay for itself in three and a half years. In Braintree, you can speak with the owner of a combined heat and electricity-producing furnace.

First annual Cohasset Day gets warm welcome said he has received dozens of e-mails, phone calls and face-to-face comments in response to the event.

"Everybody seemed energized and happy," said Brown. The broad age range from the barely walking one-year-old playing a game on the common to the town's elders catching up with the neighbors. Most importantly, Brown said, the event got people to discover Cohasset Village.

"It was a concentrated group of people looking at and experiencing the village. They were discovering things they may not have seen before," said Brown. He hopes the experience of Cohasset Day will get people to come down to the village to enjoy its geography and its merchants on a regular basis.

"I haven't found something that was really negative about the day," said Brown.

Darilynn Evans, owner of Darilynn's Home Presence and a member of the Economic Development Committee, said event offered a chance for businesses to get their name out there.

"Many people got to know the businesses and got to know each other," said Evans. Restaurants on Route 3A got to meet the owners of village establishments and vice versa. Those new to town or unfamiliar with a shop or restaurant got a taste of the business, she said.

Pinel and Brown estimate as many as 3,000 people made their way to the village and common to enjoy the Cohasset Day events. Restaurants participating in the "Fine Food Galore" doled out between 1,000 to 2,000 samples of their creation. About 700 tickets were sold for the food portion of the event, said Pinel, but the majority were family tickets for multiple people.

"Unfortunately, a lot of people helped themselves to food without tickets," said Pinel. Next year, organizers will be looking into a more visible way to identify ticket holders. Pinel offered brightly colored wristbands might work better than the hand stamp used this year.

Already organizers are looking at the ways they could enhance the day. Pinel said there were some lulls in the action, both in time and in the event layout.

"I think we can do even better," said Pinel. "Now, it is about tweaking and imagining an even better day."

Brown agrees. "The formula we came up with is great, now we just need to refine it. The key will be to never let it get commercialized because it pulls away from the real old-fashioned fun of the day."

The Economic Development Committee will be meeting next Wednesday, Oct. 1 to debrief after the event. Suggestions or comments are welcome. Visit www.cohassetchamber.org, or e-mail info@cohassetchamber.org

Cohasset receives cultural grant

State Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, and state Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, announce the town of Cohasset has been awarded a $4,300 grant from the Massachusetts Cultural Council.

Cohasset Cultural Council will use the money to help support local cultural and educational programs.

"It is important to support the programs that make our communities a better place to live," said Hedlund.

Bradley said, "I am always pleased to support funding for the Massachusetts Cultural Council annual grant program. Their continuous strong support for enrichment and education programs benefits our towns, schools and all residents who enjoy local arts and entertainment."

In all, the Massachusetts Cultural Council awarded $93,200 in grants to cultural councils, cultural organizations and schools within Hedlund's district, up from $85,400 last year.

The Massachusetts Cultural Council supports cultural organizations, schools and artists across the state. More information on the council can be found on the Web site at massculturalcouncil.org.

Cohasset receives community policing grant

State Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, and state Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, announce that the Town of Cohasset has received a $11,299 community policing grant from the state Executive Office of Public Safety.

The grant money can be used for an assortment of community policing activities and services, such as extra patrols, training or youth programs.

"Given the tough economic times our communities are facing, any extra money from the state is helpful to make sure our neighborhoods are kept safe," Hedlund said.

"The overall health of a community depends upon the safety and security of our citizens," said Bradley. "This funding provides our police departments with the tools to assist them in keeping our communities safe."

Friday night showdown

Battle of the unbeaten at Scituate

By Joel Racicot
JRACICOT@CNC.COM

Here comes the biggest game of the high school football season, so far. Cohasset versus Scituate Friday night-lights; SHS 7 p.m.

The Skippers defeated Archie's Saturday, 29-8. They led 2-0 at the half. What did head coach Pete Afanasiw say to his charges in the locker room?

"Nothing," the coach said with a slight chuckle. "We were just making too many mistakes. The offense was shooting itself in the foot."

Things got better. Brendan Doonan finished with 3 catches for 90 yards. Dana Valentine added 75 yards rushing, including a 7-yard touchdown scamper. And Jeff Cavanaro continued his young and successful campaign at quarterback, going 7-for-17 with 123 yards passing and two rushing touchdowns (26, 1).

Cohasset is now 3-0, and for a second consecutive season is hot out of the gate.

The Scituate High football team has already equaled last year's win total of two games. The Sailors, 2-0, defeated Medfield, a perennial playoff team out of the Tri-Valley League, 14-6 at home Friday. Wins against North Quincy and Medfield are nice, but everyone involved with the program from players to trainers know that Friday's home game against Cohasset is the real deal.

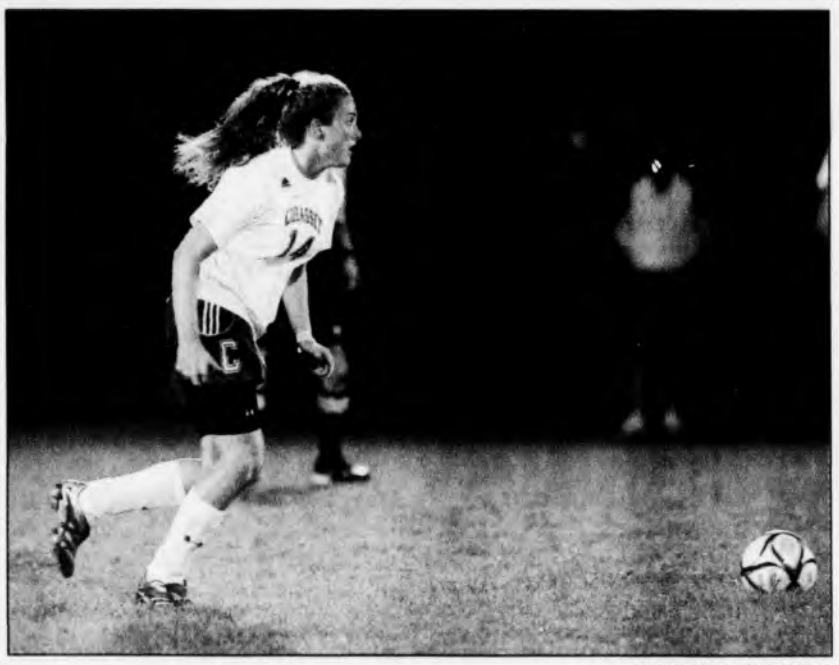
"This is a very intense rivalry in all sports."
—Pete Afanasiw

Talent wise the Red Raiders and the Warriors are very good. Scituate versus Cohasset in anything, especially football, just brings a higher level of excitement. Considering both programs share one united youth program, the rivalry and general feeling for each side is pretty solid.

The Sailors have plenty to play for after the Skippers dismantled them last season at home. Still, Sailors coach Herb Devine doesn't think his guys are out for the big "R" word.

"It's not revenge, these kids just have a renewed spirit for the game of football," Devine said at practice Tuesday afternoon. "We are going to go out there [and play our game] no matter who we are playing."

That said, he admitted that anticipation and excitement for the upcoming game is going to build as the week rolls on.



"I coached against Cohasset when I was at Abington and they are always a tough opponent," Devine said. "Whatever they do, they do it excellent…they have some real talented receivers and running backs, and their quarterback is real accurate so we are just going to try and contain them. Hopefully we don't make mistakes and give up the big play because they are a very talented squad."

Cohasset has the unenviable task of slowing down the Scituate running game, led by senior Kyle Crowley. The two-way starter ran for 258 yards on 23 carries, including an 84-yard touchdown scamper and another 50-yard run that set up the winning touchdown against Medfield.

The Sailors usually balance the attack but the shifty back ate his spinach and went Popeye on the Warriors.

Afanasiw can tell this is no ordinary week at practice for his guys.

Not just about wins

Coach Beal looks for more from 5-1 CHS lady booters

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Winning and losing are often relative

Case in point, most girls' soccer coaches would be thrilled with a 5-0 win over a league rival. But Deb Beal is not like most coaches these days. The veteran Cohasset High coach knows she's got a team capable of some truly special things. What she's seen of late from her charges, however, has not been special.

Even Tuesday's 5-0 victory over a struggling Carver squad did little to assuage the frustration that's been building up.

"Honestly, I feel like I've got to go back to the drawing board with a lot of things," said the 11th year head coach. "We're not playing well. That's the bottom line. It's not attitudinal, and it's not like the girls aren't working hard. It's frustrating because I can't really put my finger on it."

Specifically, Beal is troubled by the way the passing game that worked so well for the Lady Skippers during last fall's run to the sectional finals has inexplicably ceased to click. That was most definitely the case in last Wednesday's 2-1 loss to SSL rival East Bridgewater, and the situation wasn't much improved (according to Beal) against a weaker team Tuesday… and this after several practices devoted to focusing on this element of the game.

"We're possessing the ball well, we're shielding it well, but then we go to pass the ball the key connections just aren't being made," said Beal. "That generally means you're not moving the way you need to."

With Tuesday's victory, the Lady Skippers improved to 5-1 on the season, more than halfway to state tourney qualification with better than two-thirds of the season remaining.

Hard goals to come by

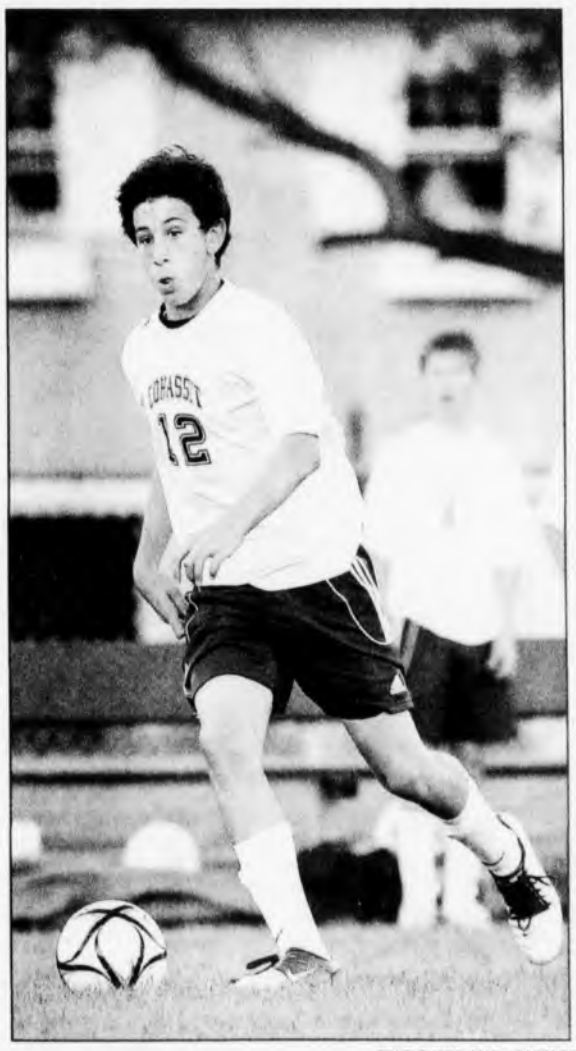
Boys soccer team winless after Carver loss

By Joel Racicot
JRACICOT@CNC.COM

The Cohasset High boys soccer team can't catch a break.

After a recent loss to Norwell in the final minutes of play, Carver got in on the fun skirting in a goal in the last two minutes to win 1-0, Tuesday. This of course has not been fun for the Skippers.

Recent scores for the Skippers, 2-1, 1-0, 1-1, 1-0. The defense has been great. The offense hasn't been. One goal losses are starting to weigh on Cohasset, 0-5-1 (0-4-1 in the South Shore League).



"The defense has been great but we only have two goals in the last five games."
Cohasset head coach
Jim Willis

"We have to find a way to score," said Cohasset head coach Jim Willis. "The defense has been great but we only have two goals in the last five games."

Willis acknowledged that no defense could be asked to play 100 percent all of the time. But if Cohasset wants to win games having a defense playing out of its mind soccer might have to take place. Lennart Brown, Owen Landon, Conor Ofsthun and goalie Will Wise have been the backbone of that defense. In fact, even the offensive guys have been playing strong defense up the middle.

"Our offensive guys are playing well in the defensive end and at the middle but they aren't attacking," explained Willis.

Cohasset tries to get in the win column Thursday night against Hull at home. Game time is 5:30 p.m. There next game after that is scheduled for Monday at King Philip for a 4 p.m. start.

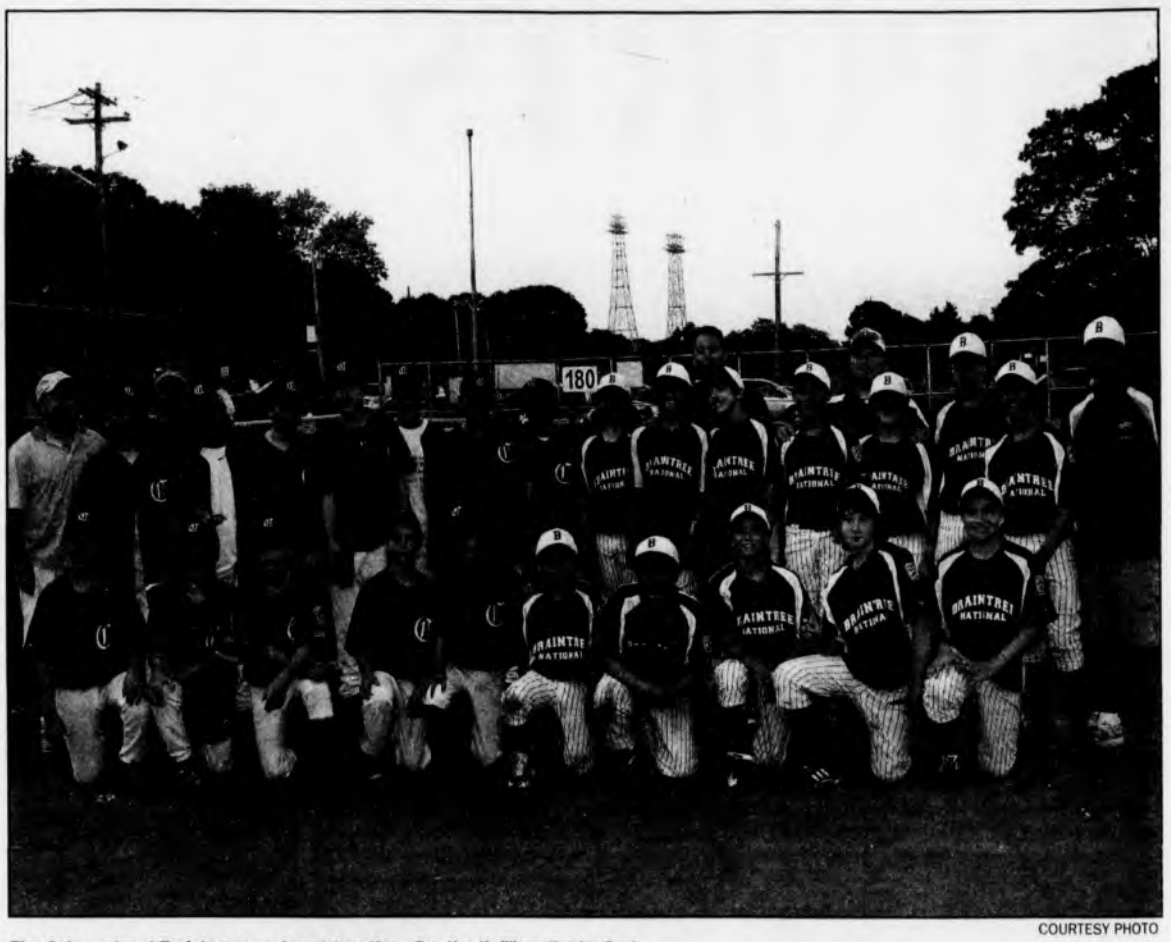
12-year old all stars reach district final

After an exciting Williamsport Tourney run, the Cohasset 12-year old all-stars played through a summer district baseball schedule, and entered the district playoffs as one of the top offensive teams. After advancing against a classy and tough Sharon team, the playoffs heated up with a rematch against the boys from Rockland, undefeated in district play, and eager for revenge against the Cohasset squad that had stunned them with a 12-2 defeat in the Williamsport tourney.

The rematch suggested an instant classic, and it did not disappoint. Under threatening gray skies in Rockland, the teams took the field, with Cohasset winning, 5-4.

The final pitted Cohasset against a tough, and top seeded, Braintree National squad. Braintree sent early notice that it meant business, as it sent seven men to the plate in the first, and scored two to take an early 2-0 lead. Cohasset escaped further damage in the second, keyed by a great play by Joe Buckley in right, who made a terrific catch and gunned out a Braintree runner for a double play.



In the third, Cohasset got busy. Ryan McKeon led off with a great at bat, fouling off several tough pitches before working a walk. Catcher Chris Cohen followed with a hard line drive single. Braintree got the next two Cohasset batters, but second baseman Brendan O'Connell followed a blast over the right field fence for a three run home run – Cohasset now led 3-2.

The lead, however, was short-lived, as Braintree battled back in their half of the third, exploding for five runs and a seemingly safe 7-3 lead as the game moved in to its later frames.

Still, the Boys in Blue authored a terrific summer, closed their Little League careers out in style, and represented the town with class and distinction.

The Boys in Blue, however, added to a summer full of comebacks and memories – in the bottom of the fourth, Tommy Ryan walked with one out, and Jack Kuppens hit another dinger that shaved the Braintree lead to 7-5. Cohasset retired the Braintree side in order in the bottom of the fourth behind the stellar defense of Terence Doonan at short, Max Montgomery at catcher, a great catch by Tommy Powers in left, and the sure hands of Mickey Barry at first. Cohasset went to the fifth trailing by two.

Braintree retired the first two. Shortstop and lead off hitter Terence Doonan then strode to the plate, and delivered big time, smacking a line drive home run over the centerfield fence to narrow the Braintree lead to one. With the Cohasset faithful now on their feet, Brendan O'Connell followed with his second home run of the game – back to back two out dingers, and Cohasset had tied it at 7-7.

COURTESY PHOTO

The Cohasset and Braintree squads get together after the thrilling district final.

But Braintree was the better squad in the end – with two outs in the bottom of the fifth, Braintree's clean up hitter responded in the clutch with his own home run, pushing Braintree back on top. Cohasset rallied again in the sixth, as Barry and Powers delivered clutch singles, but the Boys in Blue came up just short of tying the game again, as Braintree held on for the win, ending Cohasset's dream of a district title.

Still, the Boys in Blue authored a terrific summer, closed their Little League careers out in style, and represented the town with class and distinction. Congrats to them all: Sam Asnault, Mickey Barry, Joe Buckley, Liam Burke, Chris Cohen, Terence Doonan, Jack Kuppens, Ryan McKeon, Max Montgomery, Brendan O'Connell, Tommy Powers, Tommy Ryan.

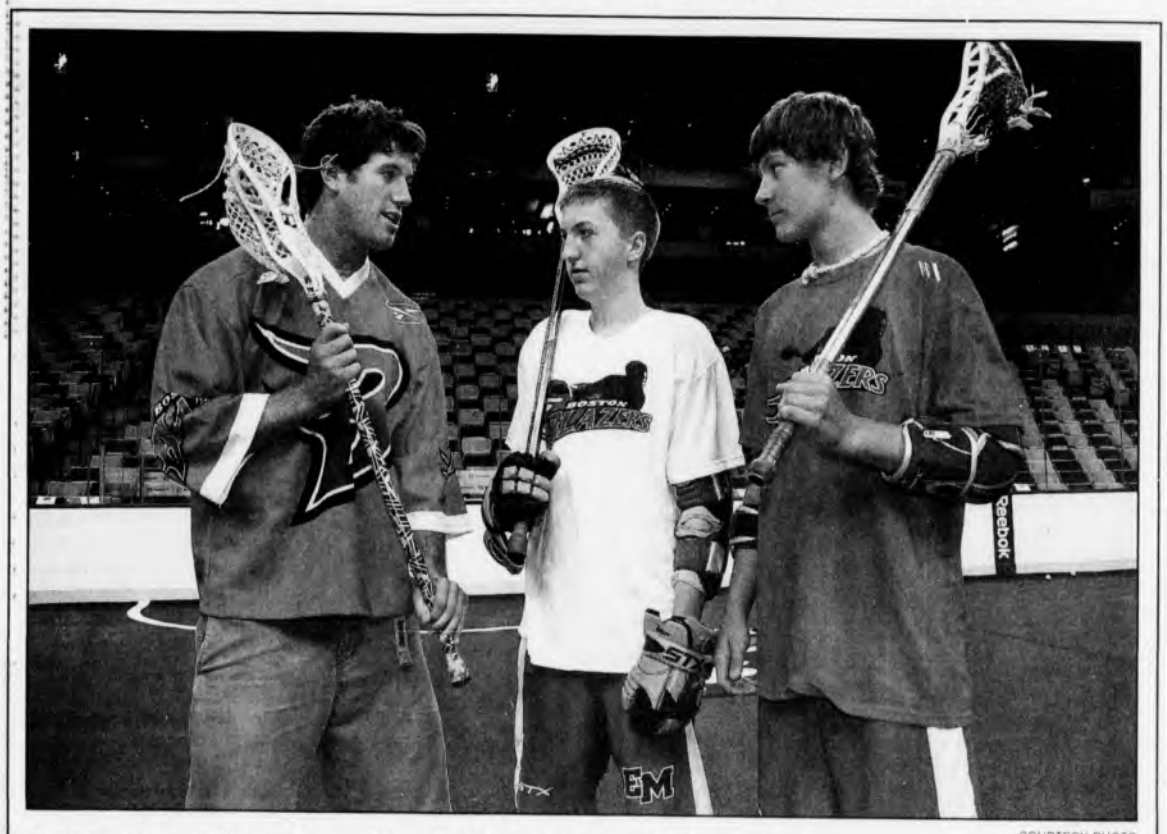
Challenging week for CHS Field Hockey

By Susan Franklin
CORRESPONDENT

Regardless of the final 7-0 score, the quality play and overall skill level of the game was memorable.

With a 2-1 record, Cohasset faced Notre Dame and Harwich on the road before returning to host Nantucket. Against Notre Dame, the Skippers got off to a slow start and the only two goals in the game came in the first half off Notre Dame sticks. In the second half, the Skipper defense was oppressive which sparked the offense led by Hillary Gaumer, Hannah Burgess and Elise Quebec. Kate O'Callaghan, Chelsea Sylvia and Emily Toomey stepped up to fill holes in the field and spark offensive play. However, the Skippers would not overcome the two goal deficit and Notre Dame went away victorious.

Thursday, the Cohasset squad traveled to Harwich who had beaten Cohasset less than a year earlier in the 2007 MIAA South Division 2 quarterfinals, before losing to Canton in finals. The bus ride was long, but high energy, and the Skippers arrived ready and excited to play. The team worked hard from the starting whistle and according to coach Abbey Coakley "played one of the best high school level games I and the Harwich coaches have ever seen."



Regardless of the final 7-0 score, the quality play and overall skill level of the game was memorable. The lopsided score may be attributed to an abundance of adrenaline that caused the Skipper squad to loose sight of key mark ups in their circle. However, the players, like the athletes they are, held their heads high and played through to the final minute. The undefeated Harwich head coach complimented the Cohasset team on their challenging level of play.

On a glorious fall Saturday, Cohasset hosted Nantucket. Pumped up from the Harwich game the Skippers came out strong, but missed marks in the circle resulted in Nantucket corners that translated to three goals early in the first half. With support on the sidelines from former Head Coach Deb Bostwick, the Skippers settled back into their game.

Keeping their heads down and their eyes up the Skippers worked on playing the game of field hockey instead of worrying about the score. Together the forwards, midfielders, and defense worked together to move the ball down the field.

Defenders Jean Thome, Marissa Tangherlini and Lucy Noble held Cohasset's ground, clearing the ball to mid-fielders like Lesen Haracz, Izzy Franklin and Natalie Dignam who all had big plays. The forward line of Hillary Gaumer, Erika Reardon, Jenny Cahill and Chelsea Sylvia made solid passes on breakaways that lead to shooting opportunities.

Working together as a team, Cohasset was awarded seven penalty corners that set up eight shootings opportunities, one being a drive into the net by senior captain Jenny Cahill. But one goal would not be enough and Cohasset left the field on the short end of the 2-1- score.

The Boston Blazers, the National Lacrosse League's (NLL) newest franchise, hosted "Blazers Day" to celebrate the team's inaugural season. The indoor - outdoor fan festival, held September 6th, gave lacrosse fans a chance to meet some of the NLL's best young prospects. Before taking the field for a youth exhibition game, Charlie Neaves and Danny Czerkawski of Cohasset, met Boston Blazers player Mitch Belisle who showed them a thing or two about the game.

Friday night showdown

Excitement and anticipation is up.

"They know what's going on," he said about his team "This is a very intense rivalry in all sports, its [neighboring] town bragging rights. Other than Hull this is the most heated rivalry for us and the guys can't take it lightly. [Scituate] has a new coaching staff, they are 2-0 and are ready to do battle."

Scituate doesn't pass like it did last year. And this year they are much bigger than Cohasset. They play a more grind down the clock offense under Devine compared to the five wide under former coach Steve Castle.

"The big thing is, we have to put them in a situation where they throw the ball," Afanasiw said. "We can't let them get into rhythm or they will crank out first down after first down."

As far as negating the Sailors size advantage, Afanasiw hopes his lighter, faster line can get use its speed.

"We have to take the fight to them."

Not just about wins

Skippers have played of late, they will most certainly be viewed as the favorites heading into their next four matches against SSL rivals Hull (yesterday on the road), Mashpee (Wednesday at home, 4 p.m. start) Abington (next Friday at home, 3:30 p.m.) and Harwich (on the road, 4 p.m. start).

The former two opponents have struggled out of the gate, and the Lady Skippers already handled the latter two in relatively easy fashion.

"But you never know," insisted Beal. "Any given day in high school sports, there are big upsets. We can't look past anyone.

"The thing we need to focus on in these next few games is getting back to the soccer we're capable of playing. The last thing we need is for complacency to set in, especially with those big games we've got a couple of weeks down the road, and then the tourney will be here before you know it."

"The win was more than a win; it was a huge step in the progress of this program and it would not be possible without all the hard work and coaching the youth in the Town of Cohasset receives through the Cohasset Soccer Club."

Head coach Deb Beal

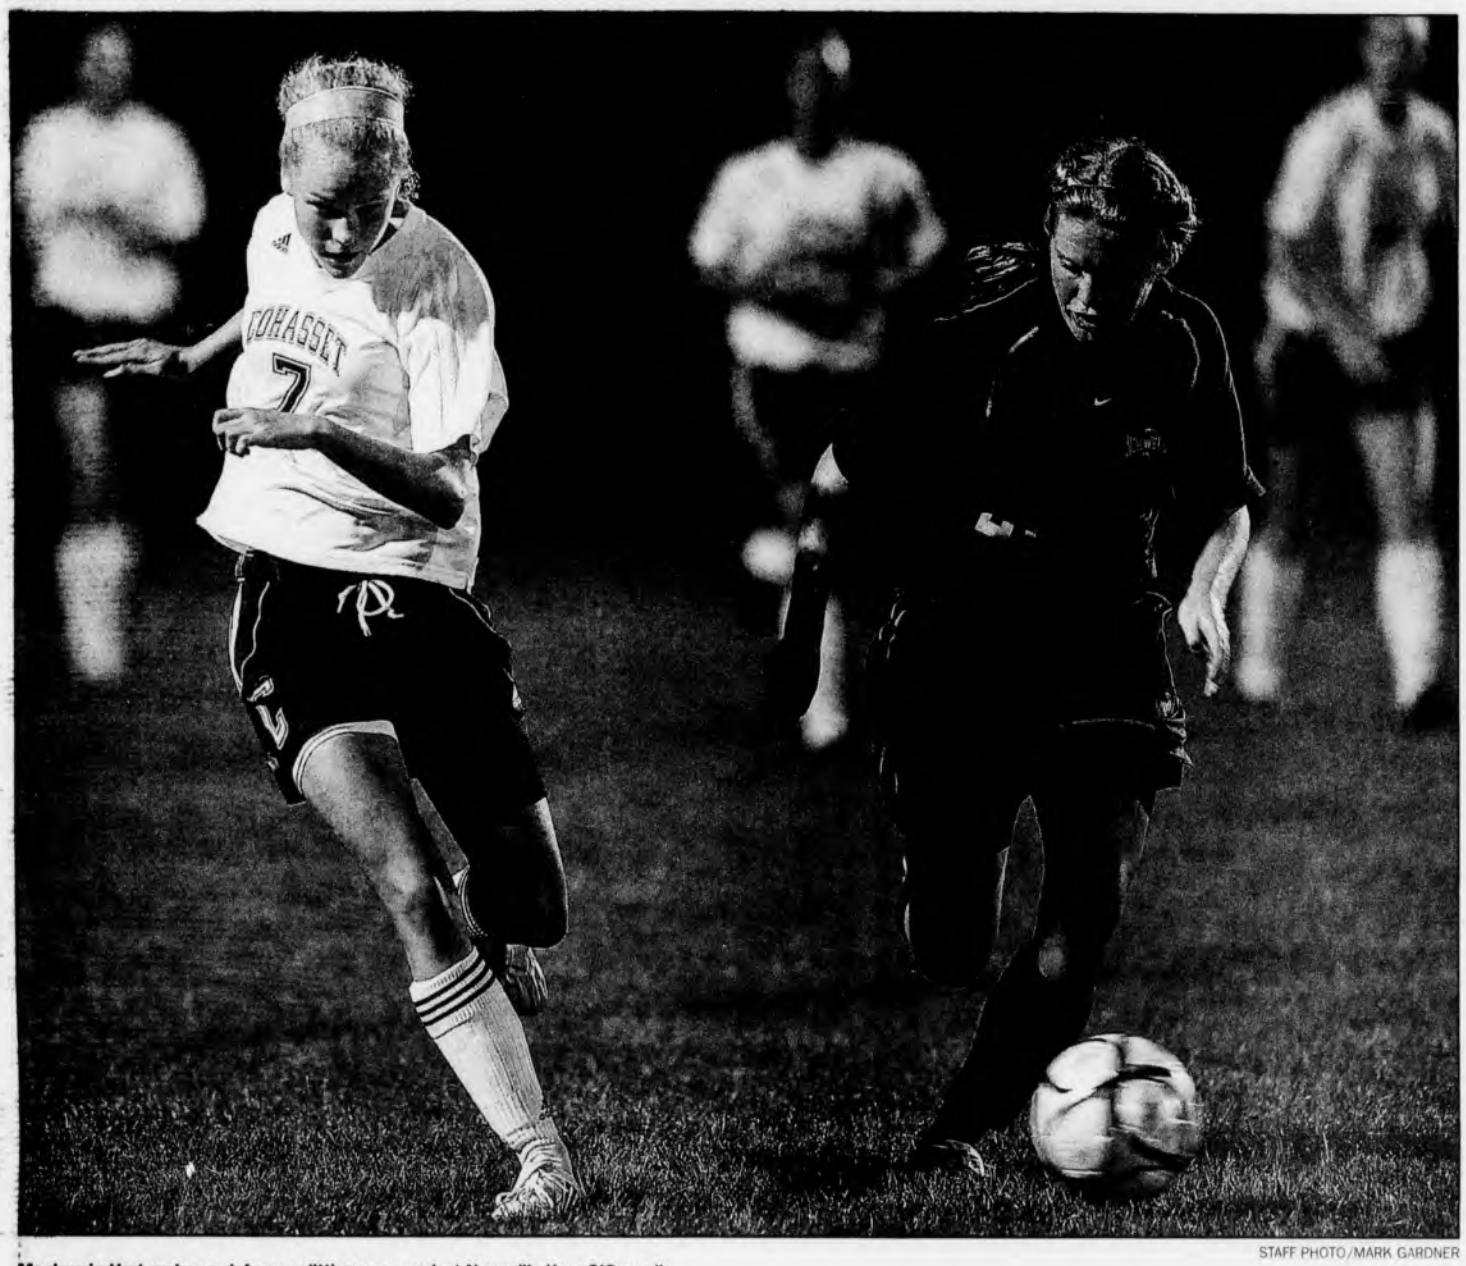
The "big games" Beal is referring to are the rematches with archrival Norwell on Oct. 10 and East Bridgewater on Oct. 15.

It is not an exaggeration to say that Beal enjoyed one of the highlights of her coaching career when her Skippers topped Norwell by a 1-0 score last Monday. Not only did this win avenge last fall's sectional finals loss of 1-0 to the Lady Clippers, but it was the first time in Beal's tenure she had coached to a win over Norwell.

"Certainly beating Norwell was a great feeling and one that will I will remember for a while," said Beal. "The win was more than a win; it was a huge step in the progress of this program and it would not be possible without all the hard work and coaching the youth in the Town of Cohasset receives through the Cohasset Soccer Club. I am extremely fortunate that I have a very hard working and talented group of girls under my charge. I am more proud of their determination and effort than I am about the win. When you see a group of young athletes accomplish something that you know they have worked hard for it is so rewarding as a coach and educator."

Now it will be the Norwell girls who will be seeking revenge in the second go-round, along with gaining a foothold in the SSL title chase. At the time of this writing, East Bridgewater, Norwell and Cohasset were in a three-way tie for first, each with one loss—Cohasset to E.B, E.B to Norwell, Norwell to Cohasset.

"We can't wait until next week or even tomorrow to start making progress," said Beal. "This isn't the time for us to suffer a little meltdown. If I don't find a way to light a fire soon, we could be in trouble."



Two players Beal did make a point of singling out for praise for their play over the last week were juniors Megan Richardson and Samantha Crough.

Skippers 5, Carver 0

Senior Corey Hart continued her torrid streak, scoring the only goal the Lady Skippers would need a few minutes in. This was the gifted striker's third goal in succession for the Skippers, her having scored the lone goals in both the Norwell and E.B. games, and sixth overall through six games.

Sophomore Caroline Fein and junior Alex Foley followed with goals to send it into the break a 3-0 game. For Foley, this was her first varsity goal.

Sophomore Carli Haggerty likewise notched her first varsity tally a few minutes into the second half and senior Maggie McGoldrick closed out the scoring a short time later.
